PREFACE.

The original design of this volume was to form a series of Charters and other deeds connected with Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh, to serve as a companion to the similar volume of the St. Giles Charters recently presented to the Members of the Bannatyne Club. The Hospital of Soltre or Soutra having been annexed to that foundation, its Chartulary, hitherto unpublished, seemed naturally to form the first portion of such a collection. The importance of the volume, it was thought, might further be increased by attempting to collect the foundation charters of other Collegiate Churches of the city and county of Edinburgh, consisting of St. Mary's in the Fields, commonly known as the Kirk of Field, Restalrig, Corstorphine, Creichtoun, Dalkeith, and Rosslyn. No separate Register of any of these Churches has been preserved, and the few existing charters contained in protocol books, and other old transcripts, for the most part occur in a very inaccurate or imperfect state.

In the Appendix to the Scotichronicon, as enlarged by Walter Bower, Abbot of Inchcolme, there is a list of Monasteries, Priories, and other religious houses which existed in Scotland during the reign of King James the Second. Under the head Præfecturæ, sive Præposituræ, the following sixteen Collegiate Churches are enumerated, with the names of the founders; Abirnethy, Bothanis, Bothvill, Carnewith, Corstorphin, Dalkeith, Dirltoun, Douglas [Dunglas], Dunbar, Fowlis, Kilwinin [Kilmun] in Cowal, Lyncloudan, Maybol, Methfven, Roslyn, St. Andrews. To two of these Provostries a remote or fabulous antiquity is assigned, viz., "Abirnethy, quam fundavit Garnach rex, filius Macdonach, Pictus;" and St. Mary of the Rock or Kirkheuch, "Sancti Andreæ, quam fundavit Constantinus secundus rex Scotorum." On the other hand, it is stated of Dirltoun that only the nomination of Provost had taken place, and of Rosslyn and Douglas,[1] that the buildings were then in progress. Dempster, in his Apparatus, Lib. i. De Religione,[2] gives a similar list, derived "Ex Gilberto Bruno." The name of Fowlis is omitted, but three others are somewhat gratuitously added, "Killesmont, fundat Andreas Dempster." "Achterles, fundat David Dempster baro de Muresk v. et Achterles ix. anno 1403, charta originaria, et acta illius familiæ." "Brechin, fundat Jacobus Dempster baro de Carrestoun," &c. The founder of Abirnethy, he calls "Rex Pictorum Garnard filius Macdonach anno 1273, Keldeis expulsis Canonici Regulares inducti."

The number of Collegiate Churches existing in Scotland at the period of the Reformation amounted to about thirty-eight. The following tabular view exhibits, as nearly as can be ascertained, the respective dates of foundation, with the names of the founders of these establishments.[3] One authority states, that "Collegiate Churches began to be built after King Alexander the Third's time (1249-1286,) when the erecting of Monasteries was discouraged by the Popes usurping the right of Patronages."[4] It is doubtful if any evidence can be shown of such Collegiate Churches having existed in Scotland earlier than the reign of David the Second (1329-1371); and it will be perceived they chiefly belong to the fifteenth century, when so much zeal and munificence was displayed in the enlargement and decoration of the buildings, and when all classes of society vied with each other in the endowment of chaplainries for the maintenance of daily stated service, always including prayers and singing of masses for the souls of the founders, their relations, and benefactors. In Scotland, in more recent times, the term Collegiate was applied to a Church where two ministers served the cure as colleagues; but it had previously borne a different and wider signification. These Collegiate Churches, called Præposituræ, were instituted for secular priests or canons, and for choristers, and were under the jurisdiction of a Dean or Provost; and the service regulated very much as in a Cathedral. Each of these churches consisted of a certain number of Prebendaries or Canons, where they had their several stalls, and with their Dean or Provost made up the Chapter. Most of these establishments, there is reason to believe, had existed as chapels or parish churches, long before they were thus enlarged and endowed by the great landed proprietors in the neighbourhood.

[1] "About the middle of the fifteenth century, a petition regarding the erection of the parish church of Douglas into a collegiate church, was presented to the Apostolic See; but though the Pope's consent seems to have been obtained, the purpose never was fulfilled."—Origines Parochiales Scotiæ, vol. i. p. 153; Priory of Coldingham, p. 236 (Surtees Society). As the mention of Douglas in the Scotichronicon is an evident blunder for Dunglass, the same may possibly be the case in the notice contained in the Priory of Coldingham.

[3] This list is chiefly derived from chapter xix. in Spottiswood's Account of Religious Houses in Scotland, subjoined to the edition of Hope's Minor Practicks, 1734; and reprinted as an Appendix in the editions of Keith's Historical Catalogue of the Scottish Bishops, 1755 and 1824. The number specified is thirty-three, including the repetition of Yester; see note, p. iii.

It is not necessary in this place to enter into any details for illustrating the history of these establishments, beyond supplying some historical notices respecting the Foundation, the chief Officials, and the Buildings of the several Collegiate Churches of Mid-Lothian, to which the present volume is restricted. But in the first instance, it may be proper to give an account of the ancient Hospital and Church of Soltre.

THE HOSPITAL OF SOLTRE.

In former times, one of the chief thoroughfares from the South led over Soltre or Soutra Hill, on the Western boundary of the county of Haddington. This hill, about seventeen miles from Edinburgh, is the highest elevation to the west of that ridge or chain of mountains known as the Lammermuir Hills, separating Lothian from Lauderdale. It is a dreary part of the country, surrounded by bleak moorlands, and used to afford only scanty pasture for sheep, until the modern improvements in agriculture have brought some considerable tracts under cultivation. Near the summit of the hill, or 1184 feet above the level of the sea, was the site of the ancient Hospital and Church of Soltre. This Hospital, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was one of those religious establishments, of which a considerable number existed in different parts of the kingdom,[1] during the Middle Ages, having been erected and endowed not only for stated religious service, but for the benevolent purpose of maintaining a certain number of indigent and infirm persons in the surrounding district, and of receiving for a limited period, pilgrims and other travellers.

The Hospital of Soltre is usually said to have been founded by King Malcolm the Fourth, in the year 1164. For this statement, the oldest authority seems to be the continuator of the Scotichronicon, who wrote about the middle of the fifteenth century. His words are: "Anno 1164,

[1] Spottiswood, in his Account of Religious Houses (see note, page ii.), has enumerated twenty-eight Hospitals, but he says this number might be greatly augmented. In proof of this, in Berwickshire alone, instead of two, Chalmers makes mention of nine (Caledonia, vol. ii. p. 347). There were Spittal-houses for receiving persons afflicted with incurable leprosy also found near most of the chief towns.

de concilio Walthevi abbatis de Melros, rex Malcolmus fundavit nobile monasterium de Cupro in Angus, et ante hoc COENOBIUM DE SOLTREY, ad viatores hospitandos."[1] But the King's charter, which contains a grant of the lands of Brotherstanes extending to Lynden on the road to Roxburghe, being the earliest of the present series, has no date, and makes no allusion to the Hospital as having been newly founded. The period of his reign however was from May 1153 to December 1165. Tradition is also favourable to his claims as founder, as it is alleged he conferred on Soltre the privilege of a sanctuary; a road through Lauderdale (a name given to the western part of the county of Berwick) leading towards Soltre was known as Malcolm's road, and traces of it are said to be still visible; while another road or causeway through the moors towards Melrose acquired the name of the Girthgate, gate signifying a road, and girth an asylum or sanctuary.[2]

The following account of Soltre, from Father R. Augustin Hay's "Scotia Sacra," an unpublished work, compiled in the year 1700,[3] may be quoted, as furnishing some minute particulars regarding the Hospital and its locality which are not elsewhere to be met with. He commits, however, a palpable mistake in saying that David, Earl of Huntingdon, was buried at Soltre in 1219. The words in the Scotichronicon to which Hay evidently refers, apud abbatiam de Sautreia sepultus,[4] unquestionably apply to Sawtrey, a Cistercian abbey in Huntingdonshire.

It is built 12 [about 17] miles besouth Edinburgh, on the road that leadeth to Kelso. Ibi sepultus est Comes David 1219 qui apud Jerdlay in Anglia decubuit cui Willielmus frater postquam de captivitate Angliæ rediit ad sua, dederat Comitatum de Huntingtonia de se tenendum et Comitatum de Garwiach, cum dominio de Strathbogy et territorio de Langforgrond, cum aliis terris et possessionibus latis et spatiosis. He also mentions the Cross-chain hill, a small eminence or rising ground about half a mile to the south of the Hospital, and says, "It would appear that along this hill, and across the Girthgate, there had been a chain, suspended for a considerable way in the direction of east and west, to mark the boundaries of the priviledged ground."

The present laird of Sowtry is nam'd Pringle. His residence is att Meusdenhead, a mile distant from the Hill. His buriall place is in ane Isle of the Abbacie which is now decay'd; the ruins only being conspicuous. The Hospitall stood on the East of the Highway as you come from Edinburgh for Kelso; on the West there are att this day some Cotter houses. The building appears to have been very spacious. About the midle hill towards Lothian near to the highway, there is a fountain called Ternity Well or Trinity Well. On the south side of the hill att the foot there is a small brook which divideth Lothian from Lauderdale. There is a village likewise distant from the Monastery about a mile and a half nam'd Sowtry; it is probable it belonged of old to the Hospitall.

King Malcolm's grant of the lands of Brotherstanes was renewed and confirmed with extended privileges by his brother William the Lion; while Alexander the Third confirms an unrecorded grant made by his father Alexander the Second, of half a chalder of oatmeal from the mill of Peebles. The series of Charters, now first printed, records various other benefactors during the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. William, Bishop of St. Andrews (1211-1226), confirms to the master and brethren of Soltre the Church of St. Giles at Ormiston in East-Lothian, with its revenue to their proper use; and likewise the Church of Strathmartin in Forfarshire. The churches of Lympetlaw, and of Wemyss, were assigned by Richard Germyne of Lympetlaw, and John of Methkill. Among other feudal barons or neighbouring landowners, bequests were made by David Olyfard, Richard son of Michael of Paistoun, Thomas of Cranstoun, Duncan of Swanystoun, and Mariot his spouse, Walter of Soltre a burgess of Berwick, and John the Marischal of Keith. It is interesting also to find among these benefactors, in 1294, a name of peculiar interest in the literary history of Scotland, Thomas of Ercildoun, son and heir of Thomas Rymour of Ercildoun, the celebrated Scottish poet, familiarly known as Thomas the Rhymer.

The original Chartulary is a very small folio of twenty-seven leaves of vellum, the last much mutilated. It was transcribed from the original Charters by William of Cranystoun, Notary Public, as appears by the Instrument, printed as No. 55, at page 48, dated at the Church of Pencaitland, the 5th of February 1399-1400, in which the titles of the preceding charters are specified. The charters are engrossed without any apparent regard to chronology, and few of them bearing the date, an attempt has been made to remedy this defect by re-arrangement, and the period of their probable dates is given in the Tabula, within a parenthesis. Of this register, on account of its antiquity, a notarial transcript was made by George Newton, for the use of the Provost of Trinity College, according to his attestation, dated 16th of August 1516. The ancient Register belongs to the Faculty of Advocates. Newton's transcript, which remains among the records of the City of Edinburgh, is a square folio of seventeen leaves of vellum, each page being attested by him, in his official capacity as a Notary. None of the original Charters have been preserved.

In the Papal Taxation of Churches and Monasteries in Scotland at the end of the Thirteenth Century, is the following valuation of SOLTRE:[1]—"Ecclesia ejusdem c s. Magister. It is not possible to furnish a complete list of the Masters, but some of their names have been recorded. In a charter of the end of the twelfth century, Sir Reginald and Sir William of Soltre, chaplains, appear as witnesses; and Andrew of Soltre, and various other chaplains, occur at a later period. In 1271, an inquisition was made regarding a dispute between the master and brethren of Soltre and the inhabitants of Crailing, in Roxburghshire, regarding a claim for a thrave of corn in harvest out of every ploughgate of the manor; the cause was determined by an assize, consisting of a suitor (sectator), and four persons out of each of the three contiguous manors of Eckford, Upper Crailing, and of Hetoun, who, under the title of antiquiores patriæ, decided in favour of Soltre.[1] RADULPHUS, Magister Hospitalis de Soltre, is named in the charter, No. 48. He swore fealty to Edward the First, in the chapel of Edinburgh Castle, 29th July 1291.[2] Four years later, THOMAS, master of the Trinity Hospital of Soltre, did homage to the English monarch at Berwick, 28th August 1296;[3] and in return, the said Thomas obtained precepts to several Sheriffs to restore the estates and rights of the Hospital.[4]

After an interval of a century, the next Master we meet with was THOMAS OF ALDTON, on the 7th of April 1401,[5] and again in October 1410.[6] STEPHEN FLEMYNG appears as Master of the Hospital of Soltre, 4th of March 1426-7.[7] His successor, MR. THOMAS LAWDER, was a person of great worth and distinction. His name occurs in the following Charters as Master of the Hospital, 8th of January 1437-8, and last of August 1444.[8] In the latter year he founded a chaplainry at the altar of Saints Martin and Thomas in the Holy Cross Aisle of St. Giles's Church, Edinburgh; and this endowment was confirmed by royal charter in 1450.[9] Lawder was, in 1452, promoted to the See of Dunkeld, as a reward for his services as preceptor to King James the Second: he was then aged about 60. Abbot Myln, in his Lives of the Bishops of Dunkeld, who passes a high eulogium on Lawder as a person of great ability and piety, states, that he was the first to introduce the custom of preaching in his diocese. Feeling the effects of advanced age, in 1476 Lawder resigned the See in favour of the Dean, James Livingston; but he survived till November 1481; and Myln has recorded the inscription on his tomb, in the Cathedral Church of Dunkeld.[1] It is probable that Lawder had resigned his Mastership on the occasion of his being appointed Bishop in 1452, as we find ALAN CANT styled Rector of the Hospital and Chancellor of the Church of St. Andrews, apparently between 1453 and 1455.[2] This designation renders it necessary to explain, that Soltre Hospital was, by authority of Pope Nicholas V., annexed to the Church of St. Andrews, as the benefice of the Chancellor, with the consent of Alan Cant, who then became Chancellor. Cant had pursued his studies at the University of St. Andrews, where he became a Bachelor of Arts in 1426, and a Licentiate in 1430. In 1460, we find that he was deceased, and that his successor was JOHN TYRY, Bachelor of Decrees.[3] In 1479, John Tyry was one of the Masters elected as assistants to the Rector of the University of St. Andrews.

Upon the annexation of Soltre and its possessions, by Mary of Gueldres, to the Foundation of the Trinity College, in 1462, its connexion with St. Andrews was dissolved, and it was restored by Papal authority to its former state as an Hospital and Parish Church, under the charge of a Vicar, who was appointed by the Provost of the new institution. JOHN HERIOT, Vicar of Soltre, is witness to several Charters in the year 1467.[4] In October 1479, Sir John Heriot, as Vicar, claimed having power from Sir Edward Bonkill, Provost of Trinity College, to grant a lease of the tithes of Fawnys.[5]

Another change befell Soltre after the Reformation. When Trinity College Church and Hospital and its revenues were transferred to the Provost, Magistrates, and Council of Edinburgh, Soutra, as it was then called, having ceased to be maintained as a distinct parish church, the place speedily lost its importance, and the buildings fell into ruins. In the Register of Ministers 1567, William Frank appears as minister of the united parishes of Sowtra, Fawlaw, and Keithhumbye, with a stipend of £30 (Scots), and the vicarage teinds of Keithhumbye. In 1574 the two former places were joined to Creichtoun, of which Adam Johnestoun was minister, with the aid of three readers. The reader at Soutra had an allowance of 20 merks, with the kirk-land, or glebe. In 1589 a separation from Creichtoun took place, and the parishes of Fala and Soutra, although in different counties,[1] were again united under one minister. This arrangement has continued to the present time, Fala becoming the parish church, and Soutra existing only in name, or in a few scattered houses, the population of the two united parishes, according to the last census, in 1851, being only 434; the rental however having greatly increased.

Before concluding these notices, I may add, that no plan or view of the old Hospital or its ruins can be discovered. On visiting the locality last autumn, to ascertain if the ruins were such as might serve for a vignette or illustration to the present volume, I was informed that about ten or twelve years ago, every vestige of the walls and foundation had been dug up and carted away for building dykes and farm-steadings in the neighbourhood. Such has too often been the fate of many of our old Ecclesiastical buildings, when in ruins, and standing in isolated positions; the proprietors being ignorant or indifferent for their preservation, and the tenants glad to avail themselves of such an easy mode of obtaining building materials. There still however exists a small aisle of the church converted into a burying-vault, which had a narrow escape, as portions of the wall had actually been taken down, when its proprietor interfered, and caused it to be restored. It formerly belonged to the Pringles of Beatman's Acre, a piece of land adjoining, bestowed, it is said, by James the Fifth, in consideration of a night's hospitality which he had received. A monumental stone to some of the family, of a late date, is built into the gable of this aisle; and over the entrance a large stone or lintel with the date and initials, 16. D. P. A. R. 86, marks no doubt the year in which this portion of the old church was so appropriated. Mention is made in the various notices of Soutra of a fountain of excellent water, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and vulgarly called the Tarnity Well. This well, we are told, "though it does not appear to have any medicinal qualities, was formerly much celebrated and much frequented by sick and diseased persons."[1] In the course of improvements it has also disappeared, the ground being under tillage, and the water carried off by means of tile-drains.

It only remains to add, that the aisle above mentioned, which rises near the top of the hill, now serves as a solitary beacon or landmark to denote the site of the ancient Hospital and Church of Soltre, which, for many an age, before poors-houses and infirmaries existed, had continued to minister relief to the sick or destitute, while in such a sterile locality, it could not but prove a welcome place of refuge for the weary pilgrim.

CROSS SECTION OF THE PORCH

OF THE
COLLEGE CHURCH
1814

ELEVATION OF THE PORCH

TRINITY COLLEGE, EDINBURGH.

The Collegiate Church and Hospital dedicated to the Holy Trinity, Edinburgh, appears to have been projected if not founded by King James the Second [1] During his reign there existed no Collegiate Church within the city, or in the immediate vicinity of Edinburgh. The premature death of that monarch at the siege of Roxburghe Castle, by the bursting of a cannon, on the 3d of August 1460, may have interfered with the necessary arrangements; but his widowed Queen, Mary, daughter of Arnold, Duke of Gueldres, acting upon his intentions, became the actual foundress of that establishment. The Papal bull of Pius II., which authorized the annexation of the Church of Soltre to the College and Hospital newly founded by the Queen, "de novo fundaverit, ac egregio quodam opere construi edificari fecerit," bears the date at Rome, 23d of October (10th kalends of November) 1460, was promulgated by Andrew Bishop of Glasgow in the parish church of Linlithgow, on the 10th of March 1461-2. Its pious object was "the praise and honour of the Holy Trinity, and of the always blessed and glorious Virgin Mary, of Saint Ninian the confessor, and of all the saints and elect of God;" and likewise the salvation of the soul of the Queen's late husband, King James, of her own soul, and those of her kindred, and of the present Bishop of St. Andrews, whose authority she supplicated to confirm this endowment.

The confirmation of this foundation by James Kennedy, Bishop of [1] See the references to James the Second, infra, pp. 58, 59, and 93. After the Reformation the Hospital became a separate establishment, unconnected with the Parish Church.

St. Andrews, is dated the 1st of April 1462, and recites the Queen's petition in which she states the purposes of the new foundation, as a perpetual College or Collegiate Church for a provost, eight chaplains or prebendaries, and two choristers, to which there was to be conjoined an Hospital for the support of thirteen poor persons named Beidmen; while the sums allotted to the Provost and other officials are specially enumerated, and rules prescribed for the regular and efficient performance of their respective duties. The plan of the building was in the form of a cross-church, of which only the choir, aisles, and transept were completed, with a south porch, and a north chantry-chapel, all in the Second Pointed or Decorated style of architecture. The site of the building was the low ground, without the city walls, to the north-east, sheltered by the precipitous rocks of Calton Hill, as exhibited in the accompanying plan, copied from Gordon's survey of Edinburgh, drawn and engraved in 1647.

Other two Papal bulls, communicated by Joseph Robertson, Esq.,[1] since the text was printed, will be given in the Appendix. The earlier of the two is dated 6 idus Julii 1462. It is by Pope Pius II., and in nearly similar terms recites the foundation of the Church and Hospital by James the Second and the Queen Dowager, magnifico et sumptuoso opere, and confirms the transfer of the Hospital of Soltre, and of the chapel of Utherogall, in the county of Fife, upon the petition of the Queen and her eldest son, King James the Third. The later bull, also of Pope Pius II., is dated 6 kalendas Septembris 1463. It contains a grant of plenary indulgence to all persons who should in a devout spirit of contrition visit the Church in the course of five years, during the feast of its dedication, on the 10th of July, or the following week, called its Octaves; and the period was to be further extended every five years, until fifty years had expired. Occasions of this kind were eagerly embraced, and crowds resorted from all quarters to avail themselves of this highly valued privilege. The offerings of each person during the Octaves, when making confession, and partaking of the holy Eucharist, were put into a coffer with two or more keys, one-third of such contributions being reserved for the Papal treasury, 'to assist in carrying on war with the infidels,' the other two-thirds were to be appropriated towards completing the building of the Church itself.

From the Inventory of Charters of Trinity College, prepared in 1580, and printed at page 143, it is but too clear that the oldest Register written upon vellum, and other early deeds, have been lost. This is much to be regretted, as the existing transcripts of the foundation Charter and its confirmation, and of the Papal bulls, are for the most part extremely inaccurate, and great care was required in collating the different copies for giving an accurate text. The second Register is a folio volume preserved in the City Archives. It commences in the year 1504, and is peculiarly interesting, as furnishing the occasional proceedings of the Chapter, with accounts of receipts and expenditure until the year 1531, attested by the original signatures of the Provosts and Prebendaries for the time; besides copies of later deeds and acts continued till 1586.

From other sources fortunately we derive some information regarding the progress of the building. During the Queen Dowager's life, the work had been commenced and carried on with great energy, under the direction of Sir Edward Bonkill, the first Provost, and of the master of the fabric, or architect, John Halkerstone,[1] as appears from the subjoined extracts from the unpublished Exchequer Rolls. These Rolls are not fully preserved, and some other entries connected with this edifice may perhaps have been overlooked, but it is pleasing, from such an authentic source, to recover the names of the persons to whom we were indebted for one of the finest ecclesiastical buildings, even in its unfinished state, which existed in Edinburgh.

[1] The name of Halkerstone was not uncommon in Edinburgh during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. It is worthy of notice, that the principal access at that time from the city to Trinity College and Hospital, was an alley or steep passage (No. 163, High Street), which to this day retains the name of Halkerstone's Wynd. See woodcut plan at p. xiv. This name occurs in deeds at least as early as 1500, and we may conjecture that it was so called in honour of the builder of the Queen's College. When the present North Bridge was erected, in 1768, most of the old houses on the west side of Halkerstone's Wynd were demolished, and the passage contracted in its width. But one or two "lands" remained till they were rebuilt, in consequence of a great fire which happened on the 5th of March 1819. (Chambers's Notices of Remarkable Fires in Edinburgh, p. 49.)

Trinity College Church, as above stated, was never completed according to its original design; but the accounts of revenue and expenditure of the Chapter, between 1504 and 1531, included in the present volume, afford sufficient evidence that considerable progress had been made in the building during that interval. No. 31 is an indenture or contract with Robert Dennis, mason, who, for the annual fee of £26, and a bounty, agreed "to labour and remain for his lifetyme in all maner of labouris concerning his craft to and for the said College:" it is dated 8th of April 1531. Subsequent accounts to 1551 are not recorded. But the loss of the entire Register, between its foundation in 1462 and 1503, is much more to be regretted. These later accounts, however, show that the interior of the church must have been ornamented in a manner suitable to the beauty of its architecture. Payments are made for rich covers to the high altar; for curtains of plesance with silk fringes above the head of the Virgin; for silver chalices, reliquaries, cups, and other vessels for Divine service; also for organs, and bells great and small; and there is mention of images of the Blessed Virgin and St. Margaret. These with the ornamented service books have long since disappeared; but there has fortunately been preserved a painting which there is reason to believe was the Altar-piece of that church. I allude to the Diptych, or folding doors, painted on both sides, containing portraits of King James the Third, and his Queen, Margaret of Denmark. This precious work of art, painted about the year 1484, is now, by Her Majesty's gracious permission, restored to this country, and exhibited in the great Picture Gallery of Holyrood Palace.[2] In a communication read to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland,[1] after the painting had been transferred from Hampton Court, where it was all but overlooked, I endeavoured to prove its original purpose, by identifying the portrait of Edward Bonkill the Queen's Confessor, and probably that of Mary of Gueldres herself, in the character of an angel seated at the organ of the church, which forms the reverse of one of the panels; the other being the usual representation of the Holy Trinity.

According to the Queen's foundation, in 1462, confirmed by Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews, the Chapter of Trinity College consisted of a Provost, eight prebendaries, and two choristers or singing boys. The first prebendary had the title of Master of the Hospital of the Holy Trinity, the second was called the Sacristan, the others were the Prebendaries respectively of 3. Browderstanis, 4. Strathmartin, 5. Gilstoun, 6. Ormistoun, 7. Hill, and 8. Newlands, being so named after the places from which the chief source of revenue was derived; but which it is not necessary in this place to recapitulate. Their duties are also accurately defined, and strict rules prescribed to enforce residence and propriety of conduct.[1] The Provost was enjoined to be present at all festivals; anniversaries were to be observed on the obits of the Queen, of the late King "our most tender husband," and of Bishop Kennedy. Each prebendary was also directed, whenever he said mass, that he should, in his sacerdotal habits, repair to the tomb of the Foundress with hyssop, and there devoutly read the prayer De profundis, with an exhortation to excite the people to devotion.

It has already been stated that the first Provost of Trinity College was Edward Boncle or Bonkill. His title, Dominus or Sir, as applied to priests, shows that he had not taken the higher degree of Master of Arts; but he was a person of distinction. I find from a notice accidentally preserved that he was admitted a guild-brother of the town gratis in 1459, in acknowledgment of his aid and counsel.[2] It is most probable he was from the first connected with Edinburgh. In addition to the notices of Bonkill which occur in the Exchequer Rolls, already quoted, on the 3d

[1] No Prebendary was to obtain institution who was not qualified by a knowledge of plain chant and descant, or singing in parts, used in cathedral services. Maitland, in his History of Edinburgh, p.209, has given a translation of this Charter, but here he mistakes the terms, and says, "That no Prebendary shall be instituted unless he can read and sing plainly, count and discount" (p. 209). Arnot, by way of improving this qualification, substitutes, "unless he can read and sing plainly, and understands arithmetic!" (p. 271.)

March 1471-2, the name of "Sir Edward Bonele, Provost of the Colledge of the Trinite beside the burgh of Edinburgh," appears in an action and summons before the Lords Auditors for certain sums due as mails to the Kirk of Sowtra.[1] It also occurs in other two cases, 13th October 1479,[2] and 13th April 1485.[3] From the phrase in the two Exchequer Rolls of 1496, tunc prepositi,[4] and quondam, we learn that Bonkill was then deceased. The name of his immediate successor as Provost from 1496 to 1502, if any one was appointed, has not been ascertained.

The next Provost of whom we have any notice was Mr. John Brady. He was apparently a native of Lothian, and was educated at St. Andrews. The name Jo. Brade occurs in the class of Determinants in 1478, and M. Jo. Brady in that of Licentiates in 1480. At a meeting of the University, held on the 2d of January 1489-90, he appears among the deputies of the district of Lothian; and he became Archdeacon of Lothian. Brady, who is styled Parson of Tannades, on the 13th February 1500-1, received a presentation to "the channonry and prebend of Crechmond within the Cathedrall Kirk of Aberdeen."[5] In the Register of the Privy Seal in 1502 is the following entry:—"A presentatioun to Master Jo. Brady of the Provestre of the Trinite College besid Edinburgh withe a claus in the samyn that the vicarage of the Wemys salbe annext perpetualle to the Provest of the said College and his successouris, &c. De data primi Septembris anno Domini v^c and twa yeris. Et regni Regis xv^tj. Gratis. per Signaturam."[6]

Brady, who continued to be styled "Archdeane of Lowthyane," in the year 1511, as Provost, gave in a propine to David Beton the sum of 44 French crowns, to obtain a new confirmation of some of their lands, and to prevent the same being granted in feu to courteours.[7] From this period till his death in November 1525, he appears to have exercised a constant and diligent superintendence of the College.

John Dingwall, his immediate successor as Provost was evidently the same with Sir John Dingwall who is mentioned by Knox.[2] John Dingwall, whose name appears in the list of Licentiates of the University of St. Andrews, in 1474, was probably the father of the Provost, as Buchanan expressly says he was a priest's son. In confirmation of this, we find in the Privy Seal Register, this notice, "Preceptum legitimationis Domini Johannis Dingwell capellani, Henrici Dingwell, Jacobi Dingwell (and three sisters), fratribus et sororibus bastardi, &c," but the father's name is not specified, 1st January 1511-12.[2] His designation, sometimes as Dominus, sometimes as Magister, might suggest more than one person of the name; but by attending to his various titles, as he enjoyed a plurality of offices, we arrive at a different conclusion. Among the auditors of the High Treasurer's accounts, 13th October 1516, he is styled "Dominus Johannes Dignvale, Archidiaconus Cathanensis." Having acquired by purchase from one of the burgesses of Edinburgh, a house and garden in the vennel of the Collegiate Church of St. Mary in the Fields, he is called "Magister Johannes Dingwall, Sedis Apostolice Prothonotarius, Ecclesiarum Moraviensis Rossensis et Cathanensis Succentor, Thesaurarius, et Archidiaconus;" and in fulfilment of this purchase he became bound to pay the annual sum of 26s. 8d. to the Provost and Prebendaries of the said church, dated at Edinburgh, 8th of March 1518-9; two of the witnesses were 'Magistri Matheus Ker, predicte ecclesie collegiate prepositus, et David Vocat, eiusdem ecclesie prebendarius, Scolæque principalis Grammaticorum Edinburgi preceptor." In 1524, Dominus Johannes Dingwall, Rector of Strabrok and Archdeacon of Caithness, obtained a charter, under the Great Seal, of the mansion and orchard of Wester Strabrok in Linlithgowshire, 15th September, and on the 19th November he conveys the said mansion, &c., by a deed of mortification in favour of the Rector and Vicar of Strabrok.[3] Towards the end of 1525, Dingwall succeeded as Provost of Trinity College. Upon the institution of the College of Justice in May 1532, Sir John Dingwall was one of the Judges on the spiritual side taking his seat as Provost of Trinity College; but he did not long enjoy this distinction, having died, it would appear, within a few months of his promotion to the bench. On the 26th of July that year, an action was raised before the Lords of Session by "Sir Jhone Dingwell, Provest of the Trinite College besyde Edinburgh, for himself, and as executour to umquhile Maister Jhone Brady his immediate predecessour and Provest of the said College aganis Elizabeth Ker Lady Bukcleucht, and Walter Scott of Branxholme knycht, hir sone," relating to the arrears of teynd-schawis, and of the parsonage of the parish kirk of Lempetlaw, in the parish of Sprouston, Roxburghshire, "for the space of xiii yearis immediatlie precedand and befoir the deceis of the said umquhill Maister Jhone quhilk deceissit in the month of November the zeir of God I^{m} v^{c} and xxv zeiris."[1] On the following day, the 27th of July 1532, in a similar action pursued against Sir William Scott of Branxholme,[2] he is styled Maister Jhone Dingwell, Prothonatour Apostolic, Provest of the Trinite College besyde Edinburgh; but I have not observed his name entered as present at any subsequent meeting of the Lords of Session. We may conclude, therefore, that he was deceased on the 16th November that year, when James Beaton, Archbishop of St. Andrews, George, Earl of Rothes, and John, Lord Erskine, were admitted as Lords of Session, being chosen by the King, "becaus thair is diverse deide, some seik, and some away of the said Lordis of Sessione, quhairthrow there is no sufficient nomber conforme to the acte maid thereupone of before, to decyde on all matteris, and to minister justice to all his leiges."[3] Buchanan, in one of his epigrams, founded, he says, upon some hexameters written by Sir Adam Otterburn of Auldhame and Redhall, knight, refers to the proud titles inscribed on Dingwall's sumptuous monument, and says he had acquired great wealth at the Court of Rome in his official capacity.[4]

It appears that Dingwall, by his last Will, had bequeathed some money for carrying on the buildings of Trinity College, and that the masons employed raised an action before the Lords of Session on the 9th of July 1533, for payment of this bequest, and of certain arrears which were then due by his executors. It is curious in itself, and may be here subjoined.[1]

Some uncertainty exists respecting the next Provost. In the Registers of the University of St. Andrews, we find the name "Willelmus Cunyngham Prepositus Sancte Trinitatis prope Edinburgh: Britan.," as being matriculated in 1532. This might be any time between November and the 25th of March following when the year 1533 commenced. But whether in consequence of death or resignation, Cunnyngham was succeeded by Mr. Robert Erskine, whose resignation, on the 28th of July 1540, is recorded in the presentation of Sir George Clappertoun to the provestry.

Presentatio Domini Georgii Clappertoun super Prepositura ecclesie collegiate diue Trinitatis prope Edinburgh nunc vacante aut cum eandem vacare contigerit per resignationem aut dimissionem Magistri Roberti Erskin vltimi possessoris eiusdem Ad presentationem domini Regis et collatione Cardinalis Sancti Andree pleno iure spectante &c. Apud Edinburgh die xxviii mensis Julii Anno domini I^{m} v^{c} xl^{o} per Signaturam.[1]

Sir George Clappertoun, one of the Prebendaries of Trinity College in the year 1520, was Subdean of the Chapel Royal of Stirling; and from 1538 to the death of James the Fifth in 1542, he appears in the Treasurer's accounts as "Maister Elimosinar (Almoner) to the Kingis Grace." Dominus Georgius Clappertoun, in July 1540, as above, secured a presentation under the Privy Seal to the Provostship of Trinity College near Edinburgh; and by that title he sat in the Provincial Council held at Edinburgh in 1549.[2] In a note to Knox's History of the Reformation,[3] I was led to conjecture that Clappertoun had resigned this office upon being appointed to the Chapel Royal, but, as already stated, he had been Subdean for several years, and the collegiate accounts prove that he continued Provost till at least the 5th of September 1566,[4] when he probably resigned in favour of his namesake, and no doubt relative, Laurence Clappertoun.

From the Register of Confirmed Testaments in the Commissariat of Edinburgh, we learn that "Sir George Clappertoun, Subdene of the Kingis Majesties Chapell Royall of Striueling, deceissit in the moneth of Apryle 1574." His nomination of Mr. Robert Pont, then Provost of Trinity College, as one of his assignees, may be held as evidence of his having embraced the reformed doctrines.

Laurence Clappertoun appears to have held the office only about three or four years: his name, as Provost, occurs on the 23d of July 1567, and also 12th of March 1570-1, in which year he must have deceased, as

Mr. Robert Pont, on the 27th of January 1571-2, obtained a presentation to the Provostry of Trinity College, Edinburgh, "vacant be deceiss of umquhile Laurence Clappertoun last Provost thairof."[1] Pont's history is well known. He took an active share in church matters as a zealous Presbyterian, was nominated one of the Lords of Session in January 1572, and was admitted before 1574, one of the ministers of St. Cuthbert's Church, or the West Kirk, Edinburgh. On the death of his colleague William Harlaw, he had a presentation to the vicarage of St. Cuthbert's on 29th December, 1578. In 1584, he was deprived of his seat in the Court in consequence of an Act which prohibited "all persons exercising functions of the ministrie within the Kirk of God to bear or exerce any office of civil jurisdiction." He was the last of the Provosts of Trinity College,[2] and having disposed to the Magistrates of Edinburgh his rights to the office, no successor was ever appointed. He died on the 8th of May 1606, in the 81st year of his age, and was interred in St. Cuthbert's Church-yard.

After the Reformation, Trinity College Church and its various endowments were conveyed by Royal Charter to Sir Symon Prestoun, Lord Provost, and the Magistrates of Edinburgh, 12th November 1567. In the first instance, the gift was specially intended for an Hospital for the support of aged and helpless persons suffering through the events of adverse fortune. But this design, by subsequent charters, and more especially by the Act of Ratification in July 1587, by which previous gifts during the King's minority, was modified, and along with the support of the poor, provision for the ministers of Edinburgh, for the education of youth were included, and also to increase the funds of the newly erected College or University of Edinburgh. As explanatory of these purposes, there is printed at p. 246, No. 220, the original Signature by King James, of Confirmation and Novodamus of all the Kirk Livings, to the Provost, Magistrates, and Council of Edinburgh, dated 7th August 1612, upon which a Charter under the Great Seal was passed. But previously to this, probably about the year 1580, the building itself was converted into a parochial church, and obtained the name of the North-East parish church of Edinburgh. The first minister was Walter Balcanquall. In 1574, he was one of the three ministers of Edinburgh; in 1588, there were four; but owing to the increased population, the town in 1598 was divided into four quarters, and two ministers were allotted to each of these four churches, instead of its being divided into eight distinct parishes. In this way Balcanquall, as minister of the North-Eastern, or as it was commonly called the College Kirk, received a colleague in the person of Mr. George Robertson. He died 4th of August 1616, in the 68th year of his age.

It is not, however, requisite to furnish any list of the ministers of this parish. Of the church itself, numerous views have been engraved for works connected with the history of Edinburgh, or the ecclesiastical antiquities of Scotland. Its site has already been described, and the accompanying plan, reduced from a drawing by Thomas Bonnar, City Architect in 1814, with details supplied from the very accurate plans by Mr. Bryce in 1848, when the church was demolished, exhibits the adjoining localities as they existed half a century ago, and may be compared with the woodcut at p. xiv., copied from Gordon's map of Edinburgh 1647. The Eastern portion of the North Loch had nearly two centuries ago been drained, and converted into the "Physick Gardens," while another portion of the ground belonging to the church was, in 1772, granted for the erection of Lady Glenorchy's Chapel, which had an injurious effect by circumscribing its limits, and enclosing it with a dead wall. But these buildings, as well as Trinity College and Hospital, have all been swept away, when the ground was acquired by the North British Railway Company for a station, warehouses, and other accommodations.

In noticing the destruction of this venerable Church, it would be foreign to the object of the present work to enter upon the vexed question of its proposed restoration. When it was scheduled for railway purposes, the indifference shown regarding it by the inhabitants can only be accounted for by its unfinished appearance, as seen when looking down upon it from the North Bridge, and their ignorance of its interior, which has been described by an eminent architect as "a very beautiful decorated composition, with the capitals of the piers enriched with foliage, not exceeded in design or execution in any English cathedral." After some further description of the mouldings, the south door and open porch, &c., it is added: "This building is all of good decorated character, and is deserving of minute examination and study."[1] But the Railway Directors nevertheless felt assured of obtaining the building at their own valuation; the minister of the church and the members of Presbytery deluded themselves with the dream of a more advantageous site and a showy edifice, while the majority of the Town-Council, with all their clamorous anxiety for the good of the parish, were most willing to erase the church altogether from the roll of their ecclesiastical patronage. What therefore could a few Antiquaries expect to accomplish in their desire to avert such an act of barbarism,[2] more especially when Government, after being appealed to, refused to interfere for the preservation of this Royal foundation, since it had become one of the parochial churches of the city, and the parties concerned had consented to its destruction?

Trinity Hospital and gardens also shared the same fate. The original building stood in the neighbourhood of the church on the eastern side of Leith Wynd; and Maitland in his History of Edinburgh, who has given a detailed account of the Hospital, with the Rules for its government, states that it was rebuilt in 1587.[1] In the meanwhile the inmates were dislodged and became out-door pensioners, thus infringing or annulling its constitution. Amidst the clamour and disputes regarding a site for the Church, the Hospital seems to have been forgotten, except for a foolish claim in the name of some old female pensioners, as having a legal right to the accumulated funds, although appropriated by an Act of Parliament for the restoration of the church. It might have been hoped that a desire to ornament the city would have actuated our civic rulers, instead of their repeated attempts to rebuild a sumptuous edifice in the worst possible situation. But the whole affair has been disgraceful to Edinburgh.

It may not be out of place to mention very briefly another matter connected with Trinity College Church. Queen Mary of Gueldres, relict of King James the Second, died at Edinburgh on the 16th of November 1463. Some delay had occurred in her interment, and her funeral obsequies were performed in the cathedral church of Brechin;[2] but she was afterwards buried near the High Altar of the College Church which she had founded. The Society of Antiquaries having recommended a careful search to be made to discover her remains, various excavations were accordingly made by authority, but unfortunately, as it proved, not at first in the right direction. It is however unnecessary to give any details respecting the discovery of the two female skeletons—the one in the mortuary chapel, as it was called, on the north side of the church, the other, some months afterwards, within an antique-shaped leaden coffin, in the Apsis, near the place where the High Altar must have stood, and which two distinguished medical professors concurred in stating was that of a female probably of about thirty years of age, but, as they conjectured, of weak intellect. The matter being brought before the Society of Antiquaries, I was led to investigate the history and character of the Queen Dowager; and the result of this inquiry, proceeding upon contemporary authority, was, that however much the Queen may have been attached to her husband, the high-flown encomiums by our later historians of her heroic speech to animate the troops after the King's death, to bring the siege of Roxburghe Castle to a close, was nothing but a pure fable; that her age could not have exceeded thirty years; and moreover, that neither her private nor public conduct was such as to warrant any exalted notions of her intellectual capacity.

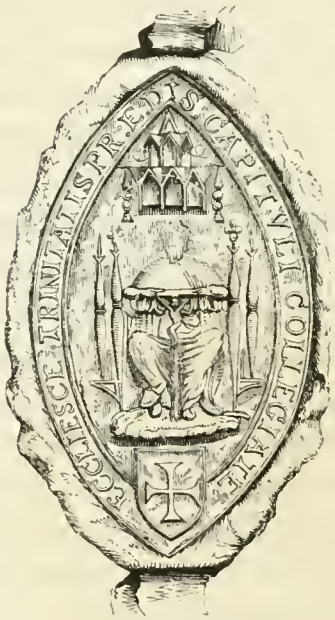
Reference is made to the old Collegiate Seal in No. 204, which in 1574 was ordered by the Chapter "to be changit and reformit." Engravings of both seals are here given, the former from an impression, which is not well preserved, attached to a deed of no importance in 1566; the latter is interesting in having a rude representation of the Church itself.



THE KIRK OF FIELD.

On the rising ground to the south of the Cowgate in Edinburgh, but beyond the city wall, was erected the Monastery of the Preaching, or Black Friars, of the Order of St. Dominick. It was founded in the year 1230 by King Alexander the Second, who bestowed the annual sum of ten marks de firmis burgalibus de Edinburgh, and also the vennel leading to the city, which still retains its name of the Blackfriars Wynd. Subsequent donations were granted by Robert the First, James the Third, and others. The buildings of the Monastery, surrounded with gardens, were extensive and sumptuous, occupying the site of Surgeon's Square, and of the former High School, which is now connected with the Royal Infirmary. But the Monastery itself was destroyed by fire in the year 1528, and nearly twenty years later the monks were plundered during the Duke of Somerset's invasion. The monastic buildings had only been partially restored when the Reformation brought such establishments to a close; and the Black Friars being included in the grant of religious houses made to the Magistrates and Council of Edinburgh, the stones of the ruinous buildings were used for other purposes.

Adjoining the boundaries of this Monastery on the west, but wholly unconnected with it, stood a Church which was dedicated to the Virgin, and known, from its site beyond the walls of the city, as St. Mary in the Fields, or, as it was familiarly called, The Kirk of Field. Arnot supposed that it also might have been founded by Alexander the Second; while Chalmers, whose words are repeated by later writers, says, "The age of this foundation, and the piety of the founder, are equally forgotten."[1] There can be no doubt that the church was of considerable antiquity, since we find in the Ancient Taxation, usually assigned to the end of the thirteenth century, under the head, "Abbas Sancte Crucis," among other dependencies of Holyrood, Ecclesia Sancte Marie in Campis, rated at 60s. Its name is also occasionally met with in seisins and other deeds when describing the boundaries of adjoining property: as 'the common vennel leading to the church of the Blessed Mary in the Field;'[2] 'et viam que ducit ad ecclesiam Campi.'[3] Its erection into a Provostry is however of a later date, and may be determined with some certainty by examining the deeds connected with the church itself, which occur in the older Protocol Books chiefly preserved among the City Archives. This Collegiate Church is usually said to have been designed for a Provost and ten Prebendaries; but no charter of endowment to this effect has been discovered. In the year 1511, certain waste lands, adjoining the cemetery of the Kirk of Field, were assigned for the purpose of erecting houses for the Master and chaplains of the several altars founded in the said church, and for the performance of divine services in singing collegialiter.[4] In the same year, Ker, who became Provost, is styled Master pro tempore; but in 1512, and in seisins of a subsequent date, he is designed Præpositus, and the church is uniformly called Ecclesia Collegiata. Among the early benefactors connected with this enlargement, Mr. David Vocat, one of the prebendaries, is specially to be noted for his liberality. His name is also associated with one of the chief seminaries of learning in this city, he having for several years filled the office of Master of the Grammar School of Edinburgh.[5]

A few years later, James Layng, burgess of Edinburgh, with consent of his wife, by a charter under the Great Seal, grants to a chaplain officiating at the high altar in this church, his tenement under the Castle wall, on the North side of the King's street. In 1531, another Royal charter confirms the mortification by Dame Janet Kennedy, Lady Bothwell, of some tenements in Edinburgh and an annual sum of 20s. for a prebendary officiating in the College Church of the blessed Virgin Mary in the Fields, within the walls of the burgh of Edinburgh; the city wall having recently been extended in that direction. This Lady, who was the daughter of John Lord Kennedy, derived her title from a grant by Archibald, Earl of Angus (her supposed husband), of a liferent of the Lordship of Bothwell, 7th of February 1509-10, and confirmed the same day by a charter under the Great Seal.[1] Before her alleged marriage, she had a natural son by King James the Fourth, who, in 1515, was created Earl of Murray.

The person who first held the office of Provost of the Church, "Præpositus Ecclesiæ Collegiatæ nostre Domine de Campis prope Edinburgh," was Matthew Ker, Master of Arts. His name occurs among the licentiates of the University of Paris in the year 1498, and he is designed of the diocese of Glasgow. On his return to Scotland he was preferred to the Vicarage of Petirculter, and afterwards to the Kirk of Field. He also acted as deputy of Robert Forman, Commissary-General, in the Official Court of the diocese of St. Andrews, in deciding matrimonial cases.[2] He was probably dead in 1520, as we find Sir Alexander Coupar, chaplain and prebendary, acting for the rest of his brethren.

The second Provost appears to have been Mr. Richard Bothvile or Bothwell, who, as much by his own talent for public employment as by family influence, obtained his full share of preferment. He was the second son of Richard Bothwell, Provost of Edinburgh in the reign of King James the Third.[3] He was educated for the church, and his name, in the year 1500, occurs in the old Registers of the University of Paris, where he probably took his degrees in law. At an early period of life he obtained a prebend in the Cathedral Church of Glasgow, and became

Rector of Ashkirk, in Selkirkshire. In 1525, we find him described as Doctor of the Civil and Canon Laws, Canon of Glasgow, Rector of Ashkirk, and Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Mary in the Fields. He was also Director of Chancery to King James the Fifth; and on the institution of the College of Justice, 27th May 1532, it being provided that one-half of the Judges should be persons of ecclesiastical dignity, he had the distinction of being named first of the Ordinary Lords on the Spiritual side. On the 11th of March 1539-40, Bothwell produced a letter from the King to the Court, dispensing with his regular attendance, in consequence of his being "greatlie troublit be infirmite and sickness," but reserving to him his salary and privileges, out of regard to his "auld and good service done to us, and to our derrest fader (James the Fourth.")[1] He however was able to resume his official duties, as his name frequently occurs in the sederunts of the Court after the date of the dispensation. On the 14th of February 1546-7, the presentation to Sir George Ker of the vacant prebend of St. Matthew in the Kirk of Field, was addressed by Robert, Abbot of Holyrood, "to the venerable and excellent man, Mr. Richard Bothwell, licentiate in the Laws, Professor of Theology, and Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Mary in the Fields."[2] He died on the 1st of January 1548-9.[3] In the following month

Mr. John Spittall, Official of St. Andrews, appears as Provost of the Kirk of Field, but he held the office only for a few years. He was Rector of the University of St. Andrews in 1547, 1549, and 1550. During the two latter years, and also as a member of the Provincial Council held at Edinburgh in 1549,[4] Mr. John Spittal is designed Præpositus Beatæ Mariæ de Campis, as well as Principal Official of St. Andrews and Rector of that University. His name as Provost occurs in the Officials' Register, 7th November 1552. He died, we may suppose, at the close of that year, as Mr. William Cranstoun, Rector of Kembach, and Canon of St. Salvator's

Collegiate Church of St. Andrews, had been appointed Principal Official before the 10th of March 1552-3.[1]

Mr. Alexander Forrest, who was educated at St. Andrews, taking his degree of A.M. in 1534, is first met with as Provost of the Collegiate Church, 18th February 1553-4.[2] In the following year, the Provost and Prebendaries, granted a feu-charter of part of their property to James, Duke of Chattelherault; and one reason assigned is specially worthy of notice, as showing that their buildings were in a ruinous state long before the Reformers had commenced their labours for the purgation of idolatry: "considering (it is said) that their houses, especially the Hospital annexed and incorporated with their College, were burnt down and destroyed by their auld enemies of England [in 1544-47], so that nothing of their said hospital was left, but they are altogether waste and entirely destroyed; wherethrough the Divine worship is not a little decreased in the College, because they were unable to rebuild the said Hospital;" they had in consequence granted in feu the tenement or hospital with the yards and pertinents thereof, to the Duke, for the purpose of erecting there a mansion-house for his own use.[3] Mr. Alexander Forrest, Provost of the Kirk of Field, appears, from an old Inventory of the Town's Charters, to have been alive in 1559.

After the Reformation, the various religious houses in Edinburgh having been suppressed and the rights conveyed to the Provost and Magistrates, Knox and his friends urged them to appropriate such revenues "for sustenyng of the trew ministeris of Goddes word, founding, bigging of hospitalis for the pure, and collegis for learnyng and upbringing of the youth, and sic uther godlie workis."[4] But selfish interests, and the unsettled state of the country interfered with these liberally devised schemes. It may, however, have been for the purpose, which was afterwards carried into effect, of founding a College, that the Council resolved to purchase the rights of the

Kirk of Field, and we are thus furnished with the name of the next Provost, PENNYCUKE. . . . [1] On the 5th of March 1562-3, "the Provost, Baillies, and Counsale ordainis Maister Johnne Spens baillie, Andro Murray of Blakbarony, and Maister Johnne Prestoun thesaurer, to talk and commune with the Persoun of Pennycuke tuiching the Kirk of Feild and hail bigingis thairof." On the 21st of June, in the Council Records we have the terms of a contract by which ". . . Pennycuik, persoun of that ilk, and Provost of the Kirk of Feild," for the sum of one thousand pounds Scots agrees to transfer to the Town "the hale bigging sumtyme callit the Kirk of Feild, bayth auld and new, with kirkyard, lugingis, &c., that pertenit of before to the Provostrie and prebendars of the samyn." Farther, on the 8th of October, a committee was named "to tak inspectioun of the Persoun of Pennecukis evidentis of the Kirk of Feild, &c., with all diligence, sua that the said Persoun have no farder cause to complene of delay."[2]

Four years later, we find that Mr. ROBERT BALFOUR, brother of the notorious Sir James Balfour of Pettindreich, was Provost of St. Mary's in the Field, when the Provost's house, on the night of the 9th of February 1566-7, was blown up, with the view of concealing one of the most extraordinary tragedies that any age or country has witnessed. This was the murder, by Bothwell and his accomplices, of Darnley, who had been lodged in the Provost's house, and where, only a few hours before, Mary Queen of Scots had visited her husband. This atrocious event, and its consequences, are too well known to require any details, but it has attached an imperishable interest to the spot where it occurred. For the purpose of conveying an accurate idea of the scene, a rough but spirited sketch of the Kirk of Field, and the adjoining localities, was hastily taken and transmitted to the English Court. It is preserved among the correspondence of the period in H. M. State Paper Office, and, by permission, an accurate facsimile of this very curious drawing is here given, on account of local interest.[3]

Balfour was forfeited by Parliament in November 1579, along with other persons who were accessory to the murder of Darnley and of the two Regents.[1] The Provostry being no longer reckoned an ecclesiastical office, was then bestowed on JOHN GIB, one of the King's attendants, in the following terms:—

"Our Souerane Lord ordanis ane letter to be maid under the Privy Seill, to Johnne Gib, ane of the Vallettis of his Hienes chalmer, gevand, grantand, and disponand to him for all the dayis of his lyff, the benefice of the Provestrie of the Kirk of Feild, within the burgh of Edinburgh, now being in our Souerane Lordis handis throw the process and dome of forfaultour ordourlie led and deduceit aganis Robert Balfour broder germane to Sir James Balfour sumtyme of Pettindreych knycht last possessour thairof . . . with power, &c., to the said Johne during his lifetyme, for brouking, josyng, and possessing of the said Provestrie, setting, using, and disponing upoun the boundis, houssis, yardis, and prebendareis thairof belanging, as umquhile Maister Alexander Forrest, sumtyme Provest thairof, or ony utheris that broukit or possest the samyne of before, &c." Dated 7th of December 1579.[2]

It may be added, that Robert Balfour, "son lawfull to Andro Balfour of Montquhanie," on the 22d May 1584, obtained a Ratification by Parliament of a remission of his forfeiture, "PROVIDING alwayis that thir presentis be not extendit to repone and restoir the said Robert to any right he has or may pretend to the Provestrie of the Kirk of Feild, sumtyme situat within the libertie of the burgh of Edinburgh fructis, dewtcis and emolumentis thairof quhairsoeuir the same ly of ony termis bypast and to come, but that the same remane and abyid perpetuallie heirefter with the Provest, baillies, counsell, and communitie of the said burgh of Edinburgh," &c.[3]

The buildings and ground of the Kirk of Field were soon afterwards acquired and appropriated to a much higher purpose than that of rewarding grooms of the bedchamber and other favourites. ROBERT REID, Abbot of Kinloss and Bishop of Orkney, who died in France, when sent as one of the ambassadors on occasion of Queen Mary's marriage with the Dauphin of France in 1558, had bequeathed the sum of 8000 merks for the purpose of founding a College in Edinburgh. In the Queen's grant to the Provost and Magistrates of Edinburgh of the Kirk lands, in 1562, when the various religious houses were suppressed, the Kirk of Field was included: the objects of this grant being the erection of hospitals for the poor, the endowment of schools of learning, and the support of the ministry. The Kirk of Field, as already stated, had been purchased in 1563, for the site of the College; but several years elapsed before the object so long contemplated was at length carried into effect.

Professor Crawford, in his History of the University, written in 1646, refers to the opposition which this scheme met with, until the year 1581, when the amount of Bishop Reid's bequest having been recovered, it was again found necessary to purchase, for the sum of 300 merks, certain rights to the Kirk of Field which had previously been conferred on John Gib and John Fenton, two of the King's familiar servitors. The account given by Crawford, as it contains a description of the locality, may be quoted:—

"The time being favourable, was weell plyed by the ministers and citizens of Edinburgh befor named, and many else assisting them. So that having obtained ane gift of ane University within the Citie, in the beginning of this yeare (1581), they purchased from John Gib and John Fenton servants to the King's Majestie, their right of the Kirk of Field, to be a place for the situation of the intended College: It consisted then of twa parts, divided be a narrow lane goeing from the Cowgate, on the west syde of Mr. Alexander Guthrie's yairds, thorow the place where the common-hall now stands; and from thence towards the west, where now the back-yet of the College leadeth to the Potterraw Port. On the north-west of this lane was the great lodging where now are the scholes of the private classes. This was the lodging of the Duke of Chatteleraw, Earle of Aran, and, be the forfeitur of the Hamiltons, disponed to some courtiers, and be them to the Magistrates of Edinburgh. On the east and south syde of this land, was the yairds, chambers, lodging, and kirk, belonging to the Collegiate provestry and prebendaries of the Kirk-a-field, commonly called Templum et Præfectura Sanctæ Mariæ in Campis, becaus that, when the Cowgate was an Loch, it was instead of the wall of the towne. But afterwards, the religious houses of the Blackfriers, Kirk-a-field, and Grayfriers, thought it more safe for them to have the towne-wall drawin about without them; and so, drying the Cowgate Logh, they enlarged the towne on the south syde. This Kirk-a-field stood along towards the east from the Potterraw Port, haveing an gairden on the south, betwixt it and the present towne-wall: On the east end thereof was the lodging of the Provost, where now the Principall of the Colledge hath his rowmes; and to the east from thence (within the present colledge yairds), were the prebendaries chambers, blown up with fire at the murther of King Henry; and to this religious convent belonged all the Colledge yairds. For many years thereafter, John Fenton keeped possession of the Provost of the Kirk-a-field's lodging, and the yaird lying thereto.

The accompanying plan, from Gordon's survey of Edinburgh 1647, may serve not only to illustrate the earlier drawing of 1567, but also to show the plan of the College, as it was divided into an Upper and a Lower Court.

Crawford, in the course of his work, mentions the period when the various parts of the College buildings were erected. But all traces of the houses which were attached to the Collegiate Church of St. Mary in the Fields had disappeared, when these additions and alterations were made during the first half of the seventeenth century; as in turn the whole of the old College buildings have been removed in the course of the present century.

The original entrance, which led into the Lower court, was from the north, immediately opposite the vennel which still retains the name of the College Wynd; and like that of Heriot's Hospital, it was surmounted with a steeple, but no view of it has been preserved. This account was given me by a well-known distinguished Physician, who was born within the walls of the College in 1749, and survived till 1835. At a more recent period, probably from 1789 till 1822, when the foundation of the present building was laid, the entrance was from South College Street, by the gate represented in the subjoined wood-cut. The house to the left was that of Principal Robertson, and afterwards of Professor Dalzel; while the low range of houses to the right, forming the south side of the quadrangle, had been inhabited by some of the Professors; the one next the gate served as the Senate-house, while the adjoining one was the birthplace of Dugald Stewart. But all personal recollections of these buildings, and their varied associations, must necessarily, in the lapse of time, be soon effaced. The Foundation itself has now, for nearly three centuries, continued to flourish, and to confer no ordinary lustre on Edinburgh as a seat of science and learning.

RESTALRIG CHURCH from the South

RESTALRIG.

According to the legendary history of the Blessed Virgin Triduan, Lestalrik or Restalrig, in the vicinity of Edinburgh, might claim an antiquity coeval with the metropolis itself. She is said to have come from Achaia, in the fourth century, in company with St. Regulus, and to have died at Restalrig in the year 510, in the reign of Eugenius the Third, the 8th of October being held as her festival day. Although no precise date can be assigned when a church or chapel was first erected and dedicated to this Saint, whose bones for many centuries were held in high veneration,[1] or when it first became the parish church of Leith, we can trace it back at least to the twelfth century. The names of some of the early rectors or vicars of the church, during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, may be found in the Chartularies of Dunfermline, Newbattle, North Berwick, and the Priory of St. Andrews. Adam, parson of the church of Lastalrigg, in the county of Edinburgh, swore fealty to Edward the First in 1296.[2] In the Taxation of Ecclesiastical benefices in Scotland, which was prepared about the same period, the "Ecclesia de Lestalrige," in the Deanery of Linlithgow, is valued at £19, 4s. 2d., and the

This was Adam St. Edmunds, brother of Alan St. Edmunds, Bishop of Caithness, and, for a short period, Lord Chancellor. Having died intestate, King Edward's officers seized in the King's hands all the goods and chattels which the Bishop possessed at the time of his decease; but the English monarch, out of his special grace for the services rendered by the Bishop, issued a warrant for their delivery to the Prior of Coldingham and to the Bishop's brother, "Magistro Ade de Sancto Edmundo persone ecclesie de Lastalrik, fratre prefati Episcopi."—(Rotuli Scotiæ, vol. i. p. 6 b. Chalmers's Caledonia, vol. ii. p. 785.)

Tenths at £1, 18s. 5d.[1] In the older Taxation, it is rated at 25 marks. The names of barons of Lestalrig of that ilk also occur, before the property passed to the family of Logan of Restalrig, who appear more distinctly towards the close of the fourteenth century as superiors of Leith. Sir Robert Logan, knight, Admiral of Scotland, was the founder of the preceptory and hospital of St. Anthony in Leith. In 1435, an extra-donation of the right of patronage of the church of Restalrig was conferred on Thomas Logan of Restalrig, by William, Bishop of St. Andrews.[2] The connexion between Restalrig and Leith was further strengthened by Royal donations. There was a spacious building near the mouth of the harbour, occupying a large extent of ground between the Broad Wynd and Bernard Street, usually considered to have been a royal residence, and always designed The King's Wark. None of our local writers, in tracing its history,[3] seem to have been aware of the date of its erection; but this is clearly ascertained by the following payments entered in the Exchequer Rolls of King James the Second:—

No. 230, 29 Junii 1459. Expense . . . Pro decem millibus et sexaginta tegulis emptis per compotantem et missus versus Leith ad edificium

Two deeds, printed in the Liber Cartarum Sancte Crucis, throw some light on the history of this property. In 1450, James the Second grants to the Monks of Holyrood his lands commonly called the Kingis Inche, lying in the lordship of Bothkenar, in the sheriffdom of Strevelyn, in exchange for the Monks' land lying in the town of Leith in the barony of Lestalrik, formerly alienated by the Monks to a certain progenitor of the King. The other, of the same date, by James, Abbot of Holyrood, describes the lands in Leith as that land now commonly called The Kingis Werk, lying on the south side of the water of Leith, &c.—(Pp. 141-144.)

In an Instrument of Seisin, 23d May 1494, in describing some boundaries, mention is made "inter terram sive tenementum Domini Roberti Gourlaw capellani Altaris in Insula Australis Ecclesie beate Marie virginis de Lestalrig."—(Canongate Protocol Book.)

The King's Work did not escape the general conflagration of Leith by the English during the two invasions of the Earl of Hartford (afterwards Duke of Somerset) in 1544 and 1547. On the 21st of October 1564, "the landis callit the Kingis werk of Leith, with the houssis and biggingis being thairon, which were brint and destroyit be our auld inemies of Ingland, the tyme of the birning of the town of Leyth," being granted in few to John Chisholme, Comptrollar of Her Hienes artillery (Register of Signatures in the Office of the Comptroller); and he having repaired or re-edified what was "alluterly decayit," he obtained a new infeftment of the same from the Queen in 1567. Some years later, James the Sixth erected into a free barony, the King's Work with its garden, and the waste lands surrounding it, in favour of Bernard Lyndsay of Lochhill; and its subsequent fate is recorded in the works above mentioned.

From this building, King James the Third, by a charter dated 3d November 1477, endowed a chaplainry in the Upper Chapel of the Parish church of the Blessed Virgin of Lestalrig, by a mortification, besides some other grants, of an annual rent of twelve marks from his land commonly called Le Kingis Werk in the town of Leith and barony of Restalrig. At the same time, the King conferred the chaplainry on his beloved orator and chaplain Patrick Hog, whose duty, and that of his successors, was to say daily mass for the salvation of the souls of the King, of his dearest consort, Margaret, Queen of Scotland, their offspring, &c.[1]

From the charters now first printed, we find that Restalrig was erected into a Collegiate Church by King James the Third. The bull of Pope Innocent VIII. which authorized the disjunction of Laswade as a mensal church of the See of St. Andrews, and the annexing of it to Restalrig dedicated to the Holy Trinity and the Blessed Virgin, states that the King had, at his own expense, commenced to build in a sumptuous manner, and endowed this Collegiate Church for a Dean and a suitable number of canons and prebendaries. At the same time, authority was given for the induction of John Frissell (or Fraser), presbyter of the diocese of St. Andrews, and Master of Arts, as Dean. The bull is dated at Rome in November 1487, or within seven months of the King's death. To the original church there had been annexed one or more chapels, and upon an enlarged foundation mainly intended for the cultivation of music. When we meet with the words Capella Regia before the year 1500, the locality of the 'Chapel Royal' is sometimes very doubtful. In the Exchequer Rolls, July 1486–July 1487, £10, 16s. 0d. was paid, "Finlaio Fell latimo pro certis tegulis lapideis ad capellam Domini Regis contiguam ecclesie parochiali de Lestalrig."

On the 3d of May 1506, Sir Walter Gray, chaplain in Lestalrig, was allowed to set in feu-farm "a land in the Cowgate of Edin^r^. for vj merkis, quhilkis six merkis was conquest be umquhile our Soveran Lordis fader (quhom God assolzye!) to the institution of ane Chapellain in Lestalrig."[1]

King James the Fourth was a chief benefactor, as appears from his charter 18th October 1512,[2] having granted the annual sum of £20, out of the King's Work of Leith, for the maintenance of an additional chaplain; and having also bestowed the parsonage of Bute, with all its revenues, to be equally divided into six free prebends. In the charter of 1515,[3] these several foundations are recapitulated, and the stipends and duties of the dean, prebendaries, and singing boys, specially defined; and twelve years later, the Rectory of Ellem was annexed to Restalrig by King James the Fifth.

The following list of the Deans of Restalrig may be considered as complete.

Mr. John Frisale or Fraser, the first Dean, was a person of note, yet there is some uncertainty regarding his parentage and early history. In the Annals of the Fraser family he is said to have been a younger son of Hugh, third Lord Lovat, educated at Oxford, and as Rector of Dingwall, before he was promoted to the Deanery of Restalrig. Another authority says, he was a natural son of Fraser of Fruid, in Peebles-shire, and a Canon of Glasgow, Abbot of Melrose, in 1485, and Bishop of Ross, and that he died in 1507, at the age of 78. In the Registers of the University of St. Andrews, we find Joannes Fresaill among the Determinants in 1472, and Mr. John Fresail, as Dean of the Faculty of Arts in 1479. He was, as above stated, admitted to the Deanery of Restalrig when the Church became Collegiate in 1487. Five years later he was appointed Clerk of Register

Rolls and Council. In the treaty of Peace with England, 15th of June 1493, he was one of the Commissioners, and is designated "Magister Johannes Fresale, Decanus Capelle Regie de Restalrig, Clericus rotulorum et registri ac consilii."[1] Under the same titles his name appears in the Acta Dominorum Concilii, 1492 to 1495. In the Exchequer Rolls, 21st June 1496–21st June 1497, we still find "Magister Johannes Fresale, Decanus capelle regie de Lestalrig." A few months later he was promoted to the See of Ross; and in the Privy Seal Register is a precept for the admission of John, Bishop of Ross, "to the temporalitie of all landis, rentis, and possessionis thairof," dated the 3d of January 1498, xith year of James IV. That the Bishop of Ross was not Rector of Dingwall, appears from a charter of confirmation, by which John, Bishop of Ross, grants to the vicars and chaplains of the Cathedral Church of Ross, an annual sum of £10 out of his property in Linlithgow, dated 10th May 1504, and one of the witnesses to this deed is John Fresell, Rector of Dingwall.[2]

We may be excused in adding a few words regarding Bishop Fraser. He was not unmindful of his former charge, having founded the chaplainry of St. Triduan in St. Triduan's aisle in the Collegiate Church of Restalrig; and James the Fourth, by his charter, dated 18th of October 1512,[3] empowered the Abbots of Holyrood and Newbattle to erect it into a new prebend. The Bishop finished the Cathedral of Fortrose, and has the report of having been a good hospitable man.[4] He died on the 5th of February 1507, aged 78; and a monument, with the effigies of a Bishop, in pontificalibus, still preserved in that church, is said to be that of Fraser. A letter under the Privy Seal was granted in favour of Sir Robert Fresale, Dean of Ross, Alexander Fresale, and James Makyson, executouris to umquhile John, Bishop of Ross, of the temporalities of the lands of the Bishoprick for one year, dated 1st of May 1507. It only remains to add, that Alexander Fresale, burgess of Linlithgow, obtained from King James the Fourth a charter of two-third parts of the lands of Arbole in the earldom of Ross and shire of Inverness, which had fallen into the King's hands "ratione bastardiæ Joannis quondam Episcopi Rossensis," 16th August 1507.

The Bishop of Ross was perhaps succeeded in the Deanery of Restalrig by Mr. Henry Wood. In the Register of the Privy Seal,[1] is this notice:—"A presentation to Mr. Henry Wood of the Deanery of Lestalrig, quhen it sal happin to vak be promotion of Mr. Jo. Fresal to the Bishoprick of Ross, or be resignation or dimission of him. De data x Septembris, Anno domini, etc., lxxxxvij [1497.] et regno Regis x. per Signaturam: gratis."

No particulars regarding Wood have been discovered. On the supposition that he was duly inducted to the Deanery, he had for his successor, Mr. Robert Boswell, a Canon of Dunkeld. His name as Dean of Restalrig occurs in the same Register, in a precept of confirmation to Walter Cargill, of a charter "indentata per Magistrum Robertum Boswell, Decanum de Lestalrig, Canon. Dunkeld. ac Prebend. de Fongort," &c., 16 November 1507.[2] Myln, in his Lives of the Bishops of Dunkeld, written in the year 1515, and dedicated to Bishop Douglas, and the chief persons connected with the cathedral church, includes Boswell prebendary of Fongort, as an open-hearted, hospitable man (liberali et magnarum expensarum viro), who completed the mansion house of his prebend, and other buildings; and he informs us he was a son of Boswell of Balmuto. Mr. Robert Boswell, parson of Auchterderran, is stated to have been the son of David Boswell by his second marriage with Lady Margaret Sinclair, daughter of William, Earl of Orkney and Caithness.[3] Such a parentage was likely enough to insure his church preferment. His birth may be placed about the year 1458. The name of Ro. Boswel appears first in the list of Determinants in 1475, and Mr. Ro. Boswell dives in that of the Licentiates, in 1477, at the University of St. Andrews. In November 1478, when chosen Dean of the Faculty of Arts, he is styled Rector of Auchterderran. In May 1479, "venerabilis et nobilis vir Magister Robertus Boswel" was elected Rector of the University, and again in February 1489-90. By some private arrangement, Boswell resigned the Deanery of Restalrig in 1510.

Mr. Thomas Dickson, one of the Canons of Aberdeen, who succeeded, was educated at St. Andrews, and took the usual degrees in the year 1492. His name as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Guthrie in Forfarshire, occurs 20th March 1508-9;[1] and his presentation to Restalrig is as follows :—

Presentatio directa sanctissimo domino nostro Pape seu cuicunque alteri cui collatio Decanatus de Lestalrig pertinet pro collatione conferenda Magistro Thome Diksoun canonico Abirdonensi super dicto Decanatu cum eundem per resignationem demissionem seu deprivationem Magistri Roberti Boswell vacare contigerit etc. ad presentationem Regis spectantem. Apud Striueling . . . die mensis . . . anno 1510, et regni Regis 22.[2]

He was also prebendary of Turreff, Aberdeenshire, and on the 24th August 1511, he obtained a presentation to the rectory of Dunbar.[3] The precepts for the royal charter (printed at p. 277), which grants two acres of meadowland on the south side of the church of Lestalrig, is dated 15th October that year;[4] and on the 18th May following, the King issued a presentation, directing the Bishop of the Isles to grant collation to Mr. Thomas Dickson, Dean of Lestalrig, to the rectory of Bute, vacant by the decease of Mr. Robert Abirnethy.[5] Another change in the Deanery took place within four years, as

Mr. John Douglas, who must have obtained a presentation to the office, by a kind of simoniacal bargain, resigned to the next Dean his claim of right, title, &c., which was sanctioned by the Lords of Council, on the 27th of June 1515 :—

Mr. PATRICK COVYNTRE, bachelor of Decrees and Divinity, was probably a native of Lanarkshire. He was long connected with Glasgow, where he was incorporated in 1487, and was for several years one of the principal Regents of that University.[2] He held the vicarage of Glencarne in 1493, and the rectory of Garvald in 1503.[3] On the 7th June 1510, James the Fourth conferred on him a yearly pension of £40, to cease when the King should promote him to a benefice of the value of 100 marks yearly.[4] In the Exchequer Rolls, 1515, there are the following payments to Coventre, as Dean of Restalrig :—

Mr. Patrik Covyntre, Dean of the Collegiate Church of Restallryg, was one of thirteen ambassadors for negotiating a treaty of peace with England who obtained a safe-conduct from Henry VIII., 6th February 1515-6.[1] Judging from the date of his successor in the Deanery, we may conclude that he died about the year 1524; and in consequence of some special endowment, we find it stated, in 1539, that the services of the vicar of Strathevin (in the presbytery of Hamilton) included prayers "pro anima quondam venerabilis viri Magistri Patricii Covintre Decani de Lestalrig."[2]

Mr. William Gibson, second son of Thomas Gibson, the ancestor of the family of Gibson of Duric in Fife, became successor to Covyntre as Dean of Restalrig about the year 1525. He received his education at the University of Glasgow, where he was incorporated in 1503, and took his Master's degree in December 1507.[3] He afterwards obtained the vicarage of Garvock, and in 1518, we find him styled Rector of Innerarity.[4] His name as Dean appears as a witness to a deed on the 12th of April 1526.[5] He was nominated one of the Senators on the Spiritual side, when the Court of Session was instituted, 27th of May 1532; and from the Acts of the Lords of Council and Session he seems to have taken a regular and active share in legal matters. On account of his extensive abilities he was, according to Douglas, frequently employed by King James V. in embassies to the Pope, who honoured him with the armorial bearing of three keys, and the following motto, Cœlestes pandite portæ; and adds, that as a reward for his writings on behalf of the Scottish Church, he obtained the title of Custos Ecclesiæ Scotiæ.[6] In May 1540, the Dean of Restalrig became Suffragan to Cardinal Beaton, retaining the benefices which he already held, and to receive in addition a pension of two hundred pounds during his life. In the letter addressed by the King to Pope Paul III. requesting the sanction of his Holiness to this arrangement, Dean Gibson

Dr. John Sinclair, a younger son of Sir Oliver Sinclair of Rosslyn, was educated at St. Andrews, and obtained the Deanery of Restalrig subsequently to his appointment as an ordinary Lord of Session on the Spiritual side, 27th April 1540. On this occasion he took his seat on the bench as Rector of Snaw; and he appears as such in the Minutes of the Court until May 1542, after which there is a blank in the Register. It is probable, therefore, that Gibson was dead before 1545, Sinclair having been appointed Dean, and Mr. John Spittall succeeding him as Rector of Snaw.[2] In the Privy Seal Register is the following notice:—

Preceptum carte confirmationis Arthuro Sinclair fratri germano Magistri Johannis Sinclare, in utroque jure licentiati ac Decani ecclesie collegiate Beate Marie Virginis de Restalrig super carta feodifirme per dictum Magistrum Johannem cum consensu Capituli ecclesie antedicte et prebendariorum eiusdem facta sibi et heredibus suis masculis . . . de totis et integris terris de Kirkhill cum pertinentiis jacentibus infra baroniam de Strabrok, &c. Apud Edinburgh penult. Augusti 1546.[3]

The Dean of Restalrig, in Foxe's account of the trial and condemnation of Adam Wallace in 1550, is mentioned as "a worldlie wise man, and not ungodlie in understanding of the truth."[4] At a later period (under the year 1557), Knox says, "that perfyt hypocryte Maister John Sinclare, then Dean of Restalrige, and now Lord President and Bishop of Brechin, began to preach in his Kirk of Restalrig; and at the beginnyng held himself so indifferent [impartial], that many had opinion of him, that he was nott far from the kingdom of God."[5] And again, he speaks of him, "blynd of ane eie in the body, but of boith in his saule."[6] Having attended his brother Henry Sinclair, Bishop of Ross and President of the Court of Session, in 1564, when he proceeded to Paris to undergo a painful surgical operation;[1] on the 18th September that year, Queen Mary addressed a letter to Queen Elizabeth for a safe-conduct to Maister Johne Sinclair, Dean of Restalrig, to return from France through England.[2] The Bishop of Ross, after lingering for some months, died on the 1st of January following, and before the close of that year the Dean was promoted to the chair as Lord President. About the same time he was also advanced to the See of Brechin. But Sinclair did not long enjoy these honours, having died of fever on the 9th of April 1566.[3]

Mr. James Lauder, the next Dean of Restalrig, was second son of Robert Lauder of Bass. It is a singular circumstance to find an Act of Privy Council, 13th March 1572-3, stating that "letters were raised at the instance of Mr. James Lauder, Dean of Restalrig, against his father Robert Lauder of Bass, who still detains him in strait prison in Beill."[4] The cause of such imprisonment at Beill, his father's residence in East Lothian, is nowhere stated, but from some other unexplained reason he must have soon after relinquished his office of Dean. It may be added in connexion with his family history, that his elder brother, Sir Robert Lauder of Poppill knight, predeceased his father, on whose death, in June 1576, James succeeded to the property, but he was murdered by his servant in October 1580.[5]

Mr. Thomas Douglas had a grant of the Deanery of Restalrig, which became vacant "by the simple dimission and resignation of Mr. James Lauder, last Dean and possessour thairof," reserving a pension of £100 to Mr. Nicholas Elphinston, 10th November 1573.[6] Douglas was minister of Strabrock, and was translated in the following year to the united parishes of Dalkeith, Laswade, and Glencorse. He derived little advantage from such preferment, having died in June 1575. In his latter will, dated 20th May 1575, Mr. Thomas Dowglas, Dean of Restalrig, constituted "his spouse, Marion

Mr. George Ramsay was presented to the Deanery of Restalrig, with the same reservation of Elphinstoun's pension, 25th October 1575.[2] About the same time he was also admitted minister of Dalkeith, Laswade, and Glencorse: his stipend "the haill twa-pairt of the Denerie of Restalrig quhairunto he is newlie provided, £64, 4s. 5d., 1 chalder, 12 bollis quheit," &c. In order to obtain possession of the various deeds connected with the Deanery, Ramsay instituted an action before the Commissaries of Edinburgh against Sir William Sinclair of Rosslyn, into whose hands they no doubt came upon the death of the Lord President. The decreet of the Commissaries contains an inventory of the several documents which were then produced and transferred to the new Dean. It is curious and worth preserving in this place:—

In the year 1592, as will be afterwards noticed in connexion with Dalkeith, Ramsay consented to the dissolution of the Deanery of Restalrig, and its division into the parsonage of Dalkeith, and the parsonage of Laswade, he himself continuing to officiate as parish minister of Laswade.

Of the Collegiate Church of Restalrig we have neither description, plan, nor representation to furnish us with any correct idea of its appearance and character. It must have been a building of considerable extent, with houses attached for the Dean and Prebendaries. That it was also richly decorated may be inferred from the circumstance that one of the earliest acts of the first General Assembly, on the 21st of December 1560, was to give directions for its demolition :—" The Ministers and Commissioners forsaids being assemblit, finds that the ministrie of the word and sacraments of God, and assemblie of the peiple of the whole parochin of Restalrig, be within the Kirk of Leith ; and that the Kirk of Restalrig, as a monument of idolatrie, be raysit and utterlie caste downe and destroyed."[1] That this injunction was carried into effect, appears from an incidental notice in a contemporary work, the "Diurnal of Occurrents," respecting the use to which the materials were applied. During the siege of the Castle of Edinburgh, in August 1571, when the city was divided by contending factions, with the view of strengthening the walls, a new port or gate was erected inside of the Netherbow Port, and for this purpose there was taken "all the aisler stanes (wrought stones) that Alexander Clerk (who was afterwards Provost of the city) had gadderit of The Kirk of Restalrig to big (build) his hous with; and als all stanis and lyme gadderit be Neil Layng to big his hous with."[2] An engraving of the Collegiate Seal is here annexed.

Notwithstanding the suppression of Restalrig "from henceforth and for ever," as a separate parish by Parliament in 1609, we find from the Minutes of the Kirk-Session of Leith, that forty years later a proposal for its restoration was contemplated. Our Minister, it states, "Mr. Alexander Gibsone, this 29th of Aprill 1649, did intimat to our Sessione, That the Presbyterie of Edinburgh are of that mynd and purpose, with the consent of the Lord Balmerinoch, to cause erect the Kirk of Restalrig, and to devyd [it] from the kirk and congregatione of South Leith." The Presbytery Records are not preserved to throw any further light on this scheme.[1] At that period the property of Restalrig belonged to Lord Balmerinoch. Some portions of Restalrig Church which were allowed to remain, consisted of the Eastern window and the walls of the Chancel. At length, in the year 1836, the ruins were restored, and converted into a place of worship, being used as a chapel in connexion with the parish church of Leith. There are engraved views by Grose, Storer, and others, but not very correct, of the ruined church prior to this restoration. The one here given is from a sketch by James Skene of Rubislaw, Esq., taken in the year 1817 or 1818, while the wood-cut vignette, at page lxiv, from a drawing made at the same time, represents the church as seen from the village.

The cemetery around these walls was principally resorted to as a burying place by those of the Episcopal communion, for the convenience of performing the offices of the dead. The mausoleum-looking building in the former view, contributed in no small degree to the picturesque appearance of this retired spot, being covered with turf and overshadowed with yew trees. Although often said to have been the crypt or family vault erected by Sir Robert Logan of Restalrig (who died in 1440-41), by whom indeed it may have been built, while it has been used as such by successive proprietors,[2] it was undoubtedly attached to the College, perhaps as the chapter-house, or as St. Triduan's chapel. The building is hexagonal, and is constructed in-

[1] But see Extracts from the Kirk-Session book, 1650-1657, in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, vol. i. pp. 161-168.

[2] Scotstarvet relates, that John Lord Balmerinoch, who died in 1633, "was buried in Restalrig's burial-place, being a vaulted isle supported with pillars: And the English army, at their coming to Scotland, in anno 1650, expecting to have found treasures in that place, hearing that there was leaden coffins there, raised up his body and threw it on the streets, &c.—(Staggering State, p. 63.)

ternally with a groined roof, the ribs springing from a centre pillar two feet in diameter, with small vaulting shafts attached to the wall; and the dimensions may be stated as fifteen feet on each side from the present base of the pillar, thus nearly corresponding with the sixteen feet of each of the hexagonal sides of the wall. On the sale of the forfeited estates in Restalrig and Leith, of Arthur, Lord Balmerinoch, by the Barons of Exchequer, in 1755, James Earl of Moray was the purchaser, at £16,961. As this crypt is not now used as a burying-place, one interment only within recollection having been permitted, it has been suggested, that if the area were cleared, and the windows opened, which at present are filled with ruble work, and the stone floor replaced, it would be a charming specimen of the architecture of the fifteenth century, of which so few specimens now exist in this part of the country. It would also be desirable to examine the great pile, apparently of earth, on the top of the building, as this might perhaps bring to light some remains of St. Triduan's or the Upper Chapel. The accompanying section and elevation has been kindly furnished by Mr. Andrew Kerr, Office of H.M. Works. Inside there is a large stone, the upper part broken off, with a shield of arms, and an inscription as follows:—" Here · lyeth · ane · honorable · Lady · Ionet · Ker · Lady · Restalrig · quha · departit · this · lyfe · 12 · day · of · Maii · Anno · 1526. I. K." The stone is not in its original position, and may have been brought from without. There are several burying enclosures round the church, including that of "the late Ronald Craufurd of Restalrig, Esquire," its door built up with stone; some of these may likely enough be of an early date.

In former days the town of Restalrig must have been a place of much greater importance than might be deemed from the straggling houses of the present village. Whether Logan's house was that known as Lochend, or on the site of what is now called Restalrig-house, is doubtful.

"At the distance of about a mile (says Maitland) from the Watergate, at the foot of the Canongate, lies the Lake of Lestalrig, vulgarly Loch-end. This lake, which is about four hundred yards in length, half as much in breadth, and where deepest about eighty feet, as 'tis said; and the fish wherewith it is said to abound are only pikes and eels."[1] For the King's sport, no doubt, we find in the Treasurer's accounts, in 1507, "Item, the xiij day of September (paid) to four men that rowit in ane bote on the Lough of Restalrig to affray fowles, v s." During the siege of Leith, in 1559-60, Bishop Lesley states, that "the Lord Gray, Lieutenant of the Inglis army ludged in Lestalrig town in the Deanis house, and many of all thair hors and demi-lances."[2] A house, with a small garden, not far from the east end of the existing church, still retains the name of the Dean's House. The old house of Craigentinny, in the immediate vicinity, formerly giving a title to the family of Nisbet, is of the fifteenth century.

Before passing from Restalrig to Corstorphine, it may be proper to add a few words regarding the parish Church of South Leith. This old fabric, which was restored and somewhat remodelled in 1845, was erected towards the close of the fifteenth century. Chalmers, who calls it "the chapel of the Virgin," says it had existed a century and a half before 1560. That there may have been such a chapel is by no means improbable, but some of his references expressly call it the Virgin Mary's Kirk; as in 1490, when

Peter Falconer of Leith granted an annuity of 13 marks for supporting a chaplain at St. Peter's altar; and in 1499, when Gilbert Edmonston of Leith, bestowed 12 merks of rent to St. Barbara's altar.[1] In an instrument of seisin, in favour of William Lauder and his sponse, the property is described as contiguous to the churchyard of "the New Kirk of the Blessed Virgin Mary in Leith," 3d of November 1496.[2] On the 2d of August 1501. John Logan, patron of the altar of St. Roche the Confessor, situated in nova ecclesia Beate Marie de Leith, presented Sir Patrick Matheson to the chaplainry of that altar, then vacant by the death of Robert Cairns.[3]

It has already been stated, that the General Assembly in 1560, when ordering the Church of Restalrig to be destroyed, enjoined the parishioners to repair to the church of South Leith. But they appear to have considered this a hardship; and among other matters submitted by the Provincial Synod to the General Assembly in October 1583, it is recorded, "Of old, Leith and Restalrig wes one parish, and the parish kirk stood in Restalrig; while now by the Act of the Assemblie it is ordained to be in Leith, and yet Restalrig refuses, in respect of old alledged priviledges. Answer, Ordains the Presbytrie of Edinburgh to tak ordour heirwith."[4] It was not however until 24th June 1609, that South Leith was erected by Act of Parliament into a distinct parish, and St. Mary's Church declared to be the parish church, and "the kirk of Restalrig to be suppressed and extinct from henceforth and for ever;" and that the benefice of Restalrig, parsonage thereof, with the glebe and manse, pertain to the minister of Leith.[5]

The first Protestant Minister of Leith, Mr. David Lyndsay, was the son of Robert Lyndsay, who was slain at Pinkie in 1547, a younger son of Walter Lyndsay of Edzell in the shire of Angus.[6] He early embraced the reformed doctrines, and at the nomination of ministers to the chief towns, in July 1560, he was appointed to Leith, his stipend 300 merkis; or £200, as stated in 1574, part of it being the thirds of the parsonage of Restalrig, amounting to £82, 8s. 10d., with the four acres of kirk-land.[1] At a later period it included "the haill personage and vicarage of Restalrige," valued at £247, 6s. 8d.[2] His name frequently appears in ecclesiastical proceedings, and he accompanied King James the Sixth in his voyage to Denmark in 1589. In 1600, when the King, as the first step to introduce Episcopacy, obtained an Act of Assembly permitting ministers to sit and vote in Parliament, Lyndsay was promoted to the See of Ross; but he still continued his charge as a parochial minister. He died at Leith, on the 14th of August 1613, at the age of 83, being probably the last survivor of his brother Reformers. It may be added, that he had for his colleague and successor in the Church of Leith, in 1609, a namesake, but no relative, Mr. David Lindesay, who published An Heavenly Chariot, at St. Andrews, 1622, 4to. This forms the first portion of his volume entitled, The Godly Man's Journey to Heaven. London, 1625, 12mo.[3]

CORSTORPHINE.

The parish of Corstorphine, anciently written Crostorfyn, lies in the valley between the Pentland and the Corstorphine hills, about three miles west of Edinburgh. Previously to the reign of David the First, in the year 1128, when he founded the Abbey of Holyrood, there existed a chapel connected with the manor of Corstorphine, and subordinate to the church of St. Cuthbert, Edinburgh. In the foundation charter, the King grants and confirms to the newly-erected Abbey the church of St. Cuthbert, under the Castle wall of Edinburgh, with all its dependencies and pertinents, including the chapels of Corstorphine and Liberton: "cum duabus capellis que ad eandem ecclesiam Sancti Cuthberti pertinent, scilicet Crostorfin cum duabus bovatis terre et sex acris, et illa capella de Libertune, etc."[1] There is also among the Holyrood charters, one of Normain, Sheriff (Vicecomes) of Berewic, in the same reign, which conveys to the Abbot and Convent of the Holy Cross of Edinburgh, "capellam meam de Corstorfin, cum omnibus rectitudinibus capelle eidem pertinentibus."[2] This chapel, we may suppose, was afterwards known as the parish church. The earliest Lords of the manor upon record were the Marischels, succeeded by the Mores of Abercorn, until the year 1376, when the property was acquired by Adam Forrester, an opulent merchant-burgess of Edinburgh. His name first appears in the public records in 1362; and in the following year, with several other Scottish merchants, he had a safe-conduct, being styled Adam Forrester, mercator de Scotia.[1] He was Alderman or Provost of Edinburgh in 1373, 1378, and 1387; he also held several offices of trust; and was taken prisoner at the battle of Homildon Hill in 1402, but was speedily ransomed. About the same time he obtained the honour of knighthood. He died on the 13th October 1405, and was probably interred in a chapel, dedicated to John the Baptist, which he himself had founded beside the parish church of Corstorphine. His widow survived him for many years. The service of his son and heir, Sir John Forrester, is dated 6th November 1405.[2] On the outer wall at the west end of the belfry, or the detached building used as the Session-house, there is inserted a stone with a monumental inscription to Sir Adam Forrester.

The first charter of donation and confirmation by King James the First, of £24 for the endowment of three chaplainries in the chapel contiguous to the parish church of Corstorphine, is dated at Edinburgh, 25th February 1425-6. Of this endowment, according to the terms of the charter, the sum of £20 was bestowed by the King himself, and not simply paid out of his coffers by way of compensation; with the additional sum of £4 (consisting of two payments of 53s. 4d., and 26s. 8d.) from annual rents in Edinburgh, bestowed by the late Sir Adam Forrester.[3] In like manner, in the Chamberlain Rolls, in the account rendered by the Ballivus of Edinburgh, 28th May 1434, the discharge includes "Et tribus capellanis per Regem fundatis in capella beati Johannis Baptiste contigua ecclesie parochiali de Corstorphine percipientibus annuatim viginti libras de firmis dicti burgi de Edinburgh, &c., xx li."[4] But among the unprinted Exchequer Rolls, in the year 1500, we find, "Et Preposito et Canonicis de Corstorphine percipientibus annuatim viginti libras ex concessione domini Johannis Forestair et confirmatione domini Regis Jacobi primi ut patet in rotulis precedentibus dictis Preposito et Canonicis per suas literas fatentibus solutionem super compotum xx li."[1] The right of patronage at least was conferred on Sir John Forrester, who had granted three acres in the village for erecting houses to the chaplains, with pasturage for three horses and three cows. On the same day (25th February 1425-6) Sir John endowed, with £6, 13s. 4d., a chaplainry at St. Ninian's altar in St. Giles's church, Edinburgh, for prayers for the welfare of the King and Queen, and for the souls of the late Sir Adam and of Margaret Forrester, his father and mother, and of Margaret, his deceased spouse.[2] Sir John at this time was Master of the King's Household and Great Chamberlain of Scotland.

The second charter of Corstorphine church was evidently the one by which Dame Margaret Forrester, Sir Adam's relict, who still survived, and Sir John, their son, bestowed an annual rent of £21, 13s. 4d. for the support of two additional chaplains and two clerks in the same chapel of Corstorphine. It was confirmed on the 26th May 1429. The erection of the Collegiate Church is usually assigned to that year, when the buildings were commenced, as the inscription on the first Provost expressly states, "istud collegium incepit A. D. 1429." It seems, however, from the Papal bull in 1444, that the foundation of the Collegiate Church was only then completed. In Sir Lewis Stewart's MS. collections, so often quoted for transcripts of old ecclesiastical deeds, there is an abridged copy of the Corstorphine charter of 1444; he has also preserved this inaccurate title of what may be called the second foundation charter: "Fundatio Ecclesie Collegiate de Corstorphin [per Johannem Forrester?] militem, ab Henrico Wardlaw Episcopo Sancti Andree confirmata, anno 1429."[4] Sir John Forrester, the Great Chamberlain, is erroneously said to have died in 1440, and to have been succeeded in the office of Chamberlain by James Lord Crichton.[3] On the return of King James from England he had been appointed Master of the Household (Magister Hospicii), 1424. In the Exchequer Rolls, Sir John Forrester appears as Chamberlain (Camerarius Scotiæ) in May 1425, and so till June 1441; the Rolls for three or four years of a subsequent date, which might have fixed the period of his decease, being lost. That he was alive in 1444, when Corstorphine was erected into a Collegiate Church, is at least highly probable: the continuator of the Scotichronicon, circa 1447, in his list of Collegiate Churches, names Corstorphine "cujus fundator dominus Johannes Forster pater;" but this does not imply his being then alive. His son, the second Sir John Forrester, who had been infeft during his father's life in 1430, is said to have died before 15th September 1454; but this date is not well ascertained. We find, however, that the grandson, Sir Alexander Forrester, was in possession of the estates in the year 1463.[1]

The third charter of foundation of Corstorphine incorporates the bull of Pope Eugene IV., already referred to, dated at Rome, 15th July 1444. It states that Sir John Forrester had assigned the annual rent of 120 gold ducats for sustaining the provost, four prebendaries, and two singing boys, with the view of completing the Collegiate establishment; and directs Patrick, Abbot of Holyrood, as his apostolic vicar, to unite and incorporate the church of Ratho, with all its rights and emoluments, to the said College for ever, the additional chaplains to be maintained out of the fruits of that benefice. In virtue of such authority, James, Bishop of St. Andrews, on the 30th October that year, gave his sanction confirming the proposed arrangements. The original deeds are not known to be preserved, but, on the 6th March 1628, an action was raised "at the instance of Mr. Alexander M'Gill, advocate, son lawfull to umquhill Mr. David M'Gill of Nisbet, sometime advocate to our Soveranis dearest father, against Sir George Forrester of Corstorphin knight, patron of the Provostrie of Corstorphin, and haifar (possessor) of the foundation;" and the Third foundation charter being accordingly produced, the Lords of Council ordained the same "to be transumed,"[2] &c. From the official transumpt then made, compared with "this authentic copy" in the Register, it is now printed (infra, p. 298-304).

Regarding the ecclesiastical buildings connected with Corstorphine there is great uncertainty. The chapel of St. John the Baptist, founded before 1405, is said to be contiguous to the parish church; and the latter is usually held to have been distinct from the College. The old church in all probability, like most buildings of the kind, was of small extent, but may have been enlarged from time to time in having such chapels attached to it. No part of the present building, as it now exists, is earlier than the middle of the fifteenth century. Under each of two arched recesses on the north wall of the chancel there are recumbent figures of a knight in armour, and a lady, with armorial bearings, carved on the front of these monuments, which clearly indicate the two Sir John Forresters, who flourished during the first half of that century,[1] and lead to the conclusion, that the monuments and this part of the edifice must have been subsequent to the death of the second Sir John Forrester, about the year 1454. In a similar recess in the wall of the south transept, there is another recumbent figure of a knight in armour, said traditionally to be the monument of Bernard Stewart, Lord of Aubigny, who came to Scotland in an embassy to King James the Fourth, but died at Corstorphine, within a short time of his arrival, in the house of Archibald Forrester, in June 1508. In his testament he expressly says,—"Inprimis, Do et lego animam meam Deo omnipotenti Beate Marie Virgini et omnibus sanctis corpusque meum sepeliendum fore in ecclesia Fratrum Nigrorum Edinburgi. Item, Lego in die sepulture mee in funeralibus pauperibus aliis piis operibus et dictis fratribus xiiij lib."[2] Agreeably to this request, we may conclude, that instead of the church of Corstorphine, he was interred in the monastery of the Blackfriars, Edinburgh; more especially as the monument is unquestionably of an older date, and the shields with arms indicate a Forrester.[3]

[1] These monuments, with the armorial bearings, are minutely described by Mr. Wood in his Peerage of Scotland, vol. i. pp. 599, 600. See also Statistical Account of the Parish of Corstorphine (Edinburghshire, p. 233), drawn up by Thomas Thomson, Esq., Writer to the Signet.

[3] See note to Dunbar's Poems, vol. ii. p. 314, and woodcut vignette, p. lxxvi. The persons represented might perhaps be identified from the arms by a skilful genealogist.

Nicholas Bannachtyn or Bannatyne, was the first Provost of the Collegiate Church. He pursued his studies at the newly erected University of St. Andrews, his name occurring, as one of the Determinants, in 1423, and as a Licentiate or Master of Arts in 1425. According to his monumental inscription, he became Provost in 1429, the year in which the Collegiate Church is said to have been founded. We also find his name, "Magister Nicholaus de Bannochtyne, Magister in artibus, Prepositus capelle Collegiate de Corstorfine," occurring as a witness to an instrument of seisin of the barony of Corstorphine, 15th September 1436.[1] He filled that office for nearly half a century; and in the inner wall of the chancel, apparently transferred from the place where he was buried, is the following inscription:—

> Estud · collegiū · incepit · āno · dñi · m°.cccc°xxix · et > codē āno magr nicholay⁹ bānachtȳ p'posit⁹ hic subt⁹ > iacēs qui obiit āno dñi m°cccc°lxx · · · cui⁹
> āniu^rsarc simul prisq, mris celebrabitur xiiii° die > mēsis iunii p quo ānuus reddituS x s· in billa de > kprk cramuound orate pro āib⁹ cor⁹ ·

The last words Orate pro animabus eorum are scarcely legible, having apparently been purposely obliterated; and the blank space on the stone after the numerals M.CCCC.LXX. may lead to the conjecture that the inscription was prepared by Bannatyne during his own life, as he certainly survived the year 1470. This is proved by a charter of confirmation, under the Great Seal, of a grant by William de Camera or Chalmers, Vicar of Kirkurd, of certain lands in Corstorphine for sustaining a secular priest to minister at the altar of St. Anne in the parish church, and one of the witnesses was Mr. Nicholas Bannachtyne, Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine, 20th September 1473.[2]

Mr. James Douglas was the next Provost, but nothing is known respecting his connexion with this College beyond the circumstance that "Magister Jacobus Douglas, PREPOSITUS DE CORSTORPHING et Decanus de Hadingtone," appears as witness to a charter dated at Dalkeith, 1st September 1479.[1] At the University of St. Andrews, we meet in the Register with the name of Jacobus Douglas among the Determinants in 1466; of Jacobus Douglas, canonicus de Dalkeith, among the Licentiates in 1468; and another, Ja. Dowglace, in 1471.

In continuing the list of Provosts, it is uncertain who Douglas had for his immediate successor.

ROWLL OF CORSTORPHINE, who is reckoned among the early Scottish Poets, may have perhaps been Provost of the Collegiate Church. He flourished towards the end of the fifteenth century; but all particulars of his history are unknown, his name only having been embalmed by his contemporary Dunbar in his "Lament for the Makeris," written about the year 1507. Referring to Death, he says,—

> He has tane ROWLL of Abirdene,
> And gentill ROWLL of Corstorphine;
> Twa better fallowis did no man sé:
> Timor mortis conturbat me.[2]

It still remains uncertain to which of them should be assigned the strange rhapsody, entitled

MR. JAMES MERCHAMSTON, whose name as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine next occurs, was, in August 1512, one of the Auditors of the Treasurer's Accounts. He is also named in various deeds, preserved in the Edinburgh Protocol books, between August 1512, and September 1518. He was Rector of Hawick in 1504; and from the Treasurer's Accounts he seems to have been employed at the Court of James the Fourth, having in 1502, received £50 "for ane young gray horse, brocht hame be him furth of Flanders," &c. In a letter of James the Fourth, 11th January 1507–8, he is styled "Magister Jacobus Mercheinstone noster familiaris."[1] He probably survived till 1526–7.

Sir Robert Cairncross, chaplain to King James the Fifth, before he obtained the Abbacy of Holyrood, in 1528, had been presented to the provostry of Corstorphine. The date of his investiture as Provost was the 5th of May 1527.[2] It may be added, that in 1539, he obtained a grant of the temporalities of the see of Ross, and in the following year was received Bishop, and also held the Abbacy of Fearn in commendam. He died 30th November 1545, and was buried in the Chanonry of Ross.

Sir Alexander Scott, by the promotion of Abbot Cairncross, in 1528, became next Provost of Corstorphine. The name was so common, that we cannot presume to identify the persons of that name who incidentally are met with towards the end of the fifteenth and first half of the sixteenth century. It might have been the future Provost of Corstorphine (Dominus Alexander Scott, presbyter) who obtained a presentation to the vicarage pensionary of Glenquhome (in Peeblesshire), 6th April 1505.[3] He at least was keeper of the Rolls of Exchequer for many years, as we learn from payments in the Treasurer's Accounts between 1512 and 1542. On the 6th April 1529, Schir Alexander Scott, Provost of Corstorphine raised an action regarding the crops of Ratho for this instant year 1528;[4] and on the 8th March 1529-30, he appeared before the Lords of Council to deliver "the evidentis of the Lordship of Dirltoun," which had been in his possession "for the space of xii. or xiii. yeiris bigane."[5] In Balfour's Practicks, a case is quoted,[6] The King contra Alex. Forestar, Provost of Corstorphine, 12th March 1529; but this is an evident mistake, as no such person was then Provost.

On the 10th January 1540, Sir Alexander Scott, Provost of Corstorphine, founded a chaplainry at the altar of John the Baptist, St. Christopher the martyr, and St. Ninian the confessor, in the church of Irvine.[1] About the same time, a letter of King James the Fifth, under the Privy Seal, was "maid to Schir Alexander Scott, provost of Corstorphine, in his latter days," and in consideration of his long, faithful, and daily service, "in all sessionis, chekkeris, and register," since the death of James the Fourth, in 1513, and of his present inability "to ordour his benefice as deuitie requiris," he received "free licence, liberty, and will to use and dispone upon all his benefices, rentis, possessionis, and takis quhatsumevir as he thinkis maist convenient and profitable."[2] In the Treasurer's Accounts for 1526 and subsequent years, his name occurs as one of the Auditors, and as such he signs the Accounts rendered 16th August 1542. He probably died in the course of that year.

Mr. James Scott, who succeeded to the Provostry of Corstorphine in 1543, was the third son of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Whitchester. He was educated for the Church, and, in the reign of James the Fifth, was Clerk to the Treasury. In September 1533, there was paid "to Master James Scott be the Kingis precept, and of consideratioun of the Lordis (Auditors) for his labouris in the Kingis materis, £13, 6s. 8d." For his employment "in dyting of the Rollis" of Exchequer, his annual fee was £13, 6s. 8d. After he became Provost of Corstorphine, he was, like his predecessor, one of the Auditors of the Treasurer's Accounts (from 1544 to 1562); and in the year 1554 he was appointed one of the Ordinary Lords of Session. He died in the autumn of 1563. He built, at Corstorphine, a house or manse for himself and successors, on which his arms, as Sir Robert Douglas mentions, are still to be seen.[3]

Robert Douglas is the next Provost of whom we find any notice. He was brother of Mr. John Douglas, parson of Kirkbryde, and one of the prebendaries in the College Kirk of Dalkeith. He died at Clerkington, 23d January 1584-5, according to his Confirmed Testament by the Commissaries of Edinburgh, 18th November 1586. In his latter Will, he desires to be buried in the College kirk of Corstorphine. Mention is also made of his children, and of James Douglas father brother to the Laird of Corstorphine. His library was very select, consisting only "of xij bukis of Scripture, and aucht bukis of prophane authors"—one of which he thus bequeaths: "Item, to the Lady of Corstorphing, ane buik callit Chaser [Chaucer?] quhilk the yung lady has borrowit fra him."

Mr. Alexander M'Gill, Advocate, was probably but a youth when he obtained a presentation to the Provostry of Corstorphine. From the proceedings in 1628, already mentioned (p. lxviii.), we learn that Sir James Forrester of Corstorphin "then remaining in the parts of France," had appointed as his Commissioners Sir Lewis Bellenden of Auchinoull, Justice-Clerk, Mr. David M'Gill, King's Advocate, and Thomas Inglis, portioner of Auldliston; and they lost no time in granting this presentation, on the 23d of January 1584–5, being the same day when Douglas died. At the same time letters were granted in favour of the said persewar and his said umquhill father (Mr. David M'Gill) as lawful administrator for his entres, &c., for the crop of the year 1585. It would however seem that M'Gill had derived but small emolument from the presentation, since he required, after a lapse of forty-three years, to institute legal proceedings, to ascertain from the foundation charter what rights, &c., belonged to him as Provost; and to this circumstance we owe the preservation of the charter itself.—For minuter information respecting the chief persons and families, and other matters connected with Corstorphine, I may refer to the account of the parish in the New Statistical Account, prepared by Thomas Thomson, Esq., W.S., to whom I have been greatly indebted in the course of the present investigation.

It only remains to add, that for several years after the Reformation, Corstorphine was not recognised as a separate parish, being again reckoned as a dependency of St. Cuthberts, having a Reader, with a stipend of £13,

6s. 8d. At length, in compliance with a memorial presented to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, 12th March 1587–8, this object was effected. To establish the claim for Corstorphine that it was of old a parish church, Sir James Forrester had referred to various deeds in his possession, and he was directed to produce them at a subsequent meeting; when, "sycht and inspectioun being taken be the Presbyterie of sindrie foundations of the said paroche kirk of Corstorphine, with bulles and other rychtis, it was found, that the Kirk of Corstorphine is of old a Paroche kirk, unto the quhilk the Presbyterie interponis thair authoritie,"[1] &c. Sir James, who died 4th June 1589,[2] was succeeded in his estates by his brother, Henry Forrester. Mr. Andrew Forrester, the first incumbent, was provided to the vicarage of Corstorphine, vacant by the decease of Adam Bishop of Orkney, last vicar thereof, 25th January 1593-4. The present building then became the parish church, and has so continued to the present day. According to the following extract from the Kirk Session book in May 1646, a new isle was erected, most probably on the site of the old parish church, which was then demolished, and the repairs or alterations made at that time may account for some of the existing anomalies :—

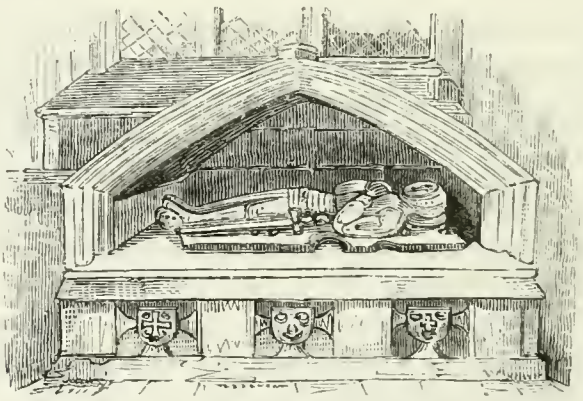
In the year 1828, when Corstorphine Church was again subjected to the necessary but unfortunate process of restoration, we may regret that its original form had not been retained, and that, contrary to all rules of Gothic architecture, a doorway, with a small porch, should disfigure the east wall of the chancel. But the primitive look of the church externally has to some extent been preserved, the older portions still having the stone roof of overlapping slabs of old grey flagstones, and the belfry-tower, with a short octagonal spire, remaining unaltered. The plans, before such alterations were made, have not been traced; but the accompanying view of the church is interesting as exhibiting its appearance in 1817, when the sketch was made by James Skene of Rubislaw, Esq., an accomplished amateur artist, who has preserved many similar views of ancient buildings in various parts of the country, as well as in Edinburgh and its neighbourhood.



MONUMENT IN CORSTORPHINE CHURCH.

CREYCHTOUN.

Creychtoun, Kreittoun, or Crichton, is a parish in the Presbytery of Dalkeith, about twelve miles S.E. from Edinburgh. The Castle, an imposing structure, now in ruins, is situated upon the precipitous bank or rock forming the south side of the deep glen through which runs the Tyne. This small stream, rising from the moor of Middleton, in the adjoining parish of Borthwick, traverses Ormiston in East Lothian, and after a course of about twenty miles falls into the Forth at Tyninghame. The church of Creychtune, which had been a rectory from an early period, in the Ecclesiastical Taxations of the twelfth century, is rated at xxx marks.[1] There was also a chapel connected with the Castle, the ruins of which still exist near the west walls, but quite distinct from the parish church.[2]

Alanus Persona de Creichtoun, appears as a party in a dispute respecting the rights of Keith and Creichtoun during the thirteenth century.[3] William de Kreittoun, son and heir of the late Thomas de Kreittoun, burgess of Berwick, was Rector of the church of Kreittoun, in May 1338, when he granted to the monks of Newbattle certain lands in New Cranstoun.[4] The Church of Creychtoun, which stands on the same acclivity to the eastward of the Castle, may be referred to the middle of the fifteenth century, when it was erected into a Collegiate charge. It appears never to have been completed; but like so many similar structures, it consists of a choir, with north and south transepts, and a square tower, the nave of the original design having, apparently, from the changing fortunes of its founder, been left unfinished. The eventful history of the Crichtouns, the Hepburns of Bothwell, and of other families connected with the Castle and Barony, is fully related by Sir Walter Scott in the Provincial Antiquities, and his account is illustrated with admirable engravings of the Castle, from designs by Turner and the Rev. John Thomson, and of the Church, by Edward Blore. See woodcut vignette at page lxxxii.

William Lord Creychtoun, who filled for several years the high office of Lord Chancellor of Scotland, with the consent of Sir James Creychtoun of Frendraught, his son and heir, converted the church into a Collegiate establishment in 1448 or 1449, for a Provost, eight prebendaries, and two singing boys, for daily services, out of thankfulness and gratitude to Almighty God for all the manifold deliverances he had vouchsafed to him. For the support of this establishment, the Lord Chancellor had assigned the whole revenues of the churches of Creychtoun and Locherwart (better known by its present name of Borthwick), provision being made for the perpetual vicars who were to serve these churches; and the patronage of four of the prebends was reserved to the Bishop of St. Andrews.

No original charters connected with this Church are known to be preserved, but an action having been raised before the Privy Council by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholm, knight, and the parishioners of Crichtoun, on the 14th July 1597, we learn that Mr. John Arthur, Advocate, was ordered to produce the Register Book of the Bishoprick of St. Andrews, in which the foundation charter of the Collegiate church, as ratified and confirmed by James, Bishop of St. Andrews, 29th December 1449, had been recorded. This Register Book is unfortunately not known to exist, but the Privy Council having ordered the charter to be engrossed in their own records, it is now printed from that source, with its ratification.

The Church itself, which has always been kept in good repair, we have assigned to the middle of the fifteenth century. The continuator of the Scotichronicon has not included Creichtoun in his list of the Collegiate churches, which indeed may have been written in 1447, one or two years before its foundation. But there is an indenture or contract between William Lord Creychtoun, Chancellor of Scotland, and Friar Michael Gray, master of the Hospital of St. Anthony, Leith, in which mention is made of certain lands granted "ad Ecclesiam parochialem de Crechtoun seu COLLEGIUM inibi Deo duce fundandum," 16th May 1448.[1]

I cannot pretend to furnish a complete list of the Provosts of this Church, but the following notices may afterwards be enlarged by further research were it of much importance.

SIR PETER CREYCHTOUN, Parson of Locherwart, having consented to the annexation and arrangements of 1449,[2] he, in all probability, was the first who held the office of Provost of Crichtoun.

After a long interval, we find, in the Treasurer's Accounts the following payment, 13th September 1507:—"To the Provost of Crechtoun, in the name of my Lord of Sanctandrois, in his purs when he departit, 186 French Crownis of wecht," amounting to £188, 10s. The Provost was

SIR THOMAS HALKERSTOUN, and the payment was connected with his proceeding to France and Italy, as tutor or preceptor of Alexander Stewart, the young Archbishop of St. Andrews, a natural son of King James the Fourth, when sent abroad to complete his education. In the King's letters he is styled "Dominus Thomas Halkerstoun familiaris noster, Archiepiscopi preceptor."[3] They returned to Scotland in 1510; but the youthful and accomplished prelate, to the regret of Erasmus and other learned men, was slain at Floddon in 1513. Thomas Halkerstoun Prepositus de Crechtoun, was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer's Accounts, 3d August 1513, or one month before James the Fourth's death;[4] and in October the Provost of Crichtoun was one of the Council who were appointed to assist the Queen Dowager, after that fatal day of Floddon. Sir Thomas Halkerstoun, Provost of Creychtoun, had a letter under the Privy Seal, 22d September 1515, with licence "to big fore-stayrs toward the hie street of his land and tenement in Edinburgh."[1] He also audits the same Accounts, 3d October 1516; and again 4th September 1518.

Mr. George Lockhart, the next Provost, was distinguished for his learning and his writings on Dialectics and Philosophy. He was a native of Ayr, and completed his education at the University of Paris; where for several years he was Professor of Natural Philosophy in the College of Montacute. In November 1521, "Magister noster Mag. Georgius Lockhart, S. Theol. Professor, Præpositus de Crechton" was chosen Rector of the University of St. Andrews; and again in the years 1522 to 1525. In January 1526-7, Robert (Schaw) Bishop of Murray issued a letter of commission to the venerable and accomplished man Mr. George Lokcart, Professor of Sacred Theology, and Provost of the Collegiate church of Creychtoun, relating to certain bursaries in the University of Paris which had been founded by one of his early predecessors, a Bishop of Murray.[2] Lockhart afterwards became Dean of Glasgow, and from the Obituary of that See, we learn that he died 22d June 1547.[3]

The name of Lockhart's immediate successor is not known. Several years had apparently intervened before the office was conferred on Chalmer who is next met with as Provost of Creichtoun.

Mr. David Chalmer or Chalmers of Ormond, was born in the shire of Ross, and was educated for the church, probably at King's College, Aberdeen. He proceeded abroad, says Dr. George Mackenzie, and studied Theology and the Laws in France and Italy.[4] On his return to Scotland, he was successively appointed Parson of Suddy, Provost of Creichtoun, and Chancellor of the Diocese of Ross. The date of his appointment to Creichtoun is uncertain. On the 26th January 1565, he was admitted an Ordinary Lord on the Spiritual side, as Chancellor of Ross. In the Parliament, 19th April 1567,[1] her Majesty, Queen Mary, "havand respect to the gud trew and obedient service done . . . be hir familiar servitour and counsallour Maister Dauid Chalmer Prouest of Creichtoun, nocht onlye in this realme, bot in sic foreyn cuntreis as it pleisit hir Hienes to command him, and that therthrow baith he put his persoun in perrell and danger," &c., ratified and approved the charter under the Great Seal, of the lands of Castleton and others in the Earldom of Ross, granted in his favour, 29th December 1560. Soon afterwards, being openly accused of having been accessory to the murder of Darnley, and of having assisted Mary Queen of Scots in her escape from Lochlevin, he considered it prudent to leave the country; and in the process or doom of forfeiture against the Hamiltons, by Parliament, on the 19th August 1568, "Master David Chalmer Proweist of Creichton" is included.[2] During his residence in France, he published in 1579, his "Histoire Abrégée de tous les Roys de France, Angleterre et Escosse," &c., along with two tracts, which he dedicated to Mary Queen of Scots. After fifteen years' absence he returned to Scotland, and succeeded in obtaining "his Hienes's pacification," 4th September 1583, ratified in May 1584.[3] On the 21st June 1586, he was restored to his seat on the bench.[4] He died at the Chanonry of Ross, 18th October 1592; and by his last will, made the same day, he appointed his son William Chalmer to be "brocht up be (his tutors) faythfullie, as they will answer befoir God;" and that the eldest of his two daughters, when of perfect age, should marry the son of John Chalmer of Tyrie, whom failing, any other of the house of Streichyn, "at her awin plesour."[5]

Mr. Adam Johnstoun, minister of Creichtoun after Chalmer's forfeiture in 1568, had obtained a grant of the provostship. He was educated at St. Andrews, being a Determinant in St. Salvator's College in 1555. Whether he was in priest's orders, and held any living before the Reformation, is not known. It has already been noticed[1] that Soutra and Fala were united to his parish in 1574, but they were again disjoined in 1589, Johnstoun continuing minister of Creichtoun, as well as provost, and enjoying the thirds of his benefice, with "the manse gleib and kirkland of Creichtoun." In the year 1595, his stipend was "the haill Provostrie of Creichtoun quherunto he wes provydit, £133, 6s. 8d." From incidental notices in Calderwood, he appears to have taken an active share in church matters, and to have been a zealous friend of Presbyterian church government. He was present at the General Assembly in March 1595-6. "Mr. Adam Johnstoun, Minister of Creichtoun," died at the close of that year. In his last will, written at his request by the hand of Mr. Oliver Colt, minister of Borthwick, and dated the 23d December 1596, he nominates and appoints Elizabeth Borthwick, his spouse, his only executrix and tutrix "to the haill bairnes:" his "gudis and geir" being estimated at £6302, 13s. 4d. Scots.[2]

DALKEITH.

The town of Dalkeith is situated between the rivers called the North Esk and the South Esk, six miles from Edinburgh. It derived its chief importance in early times from its baronial castle; but, the male line of the ancient family of Graham becoming extinct in the reign of David the Second, the property, and also extensive possessions in Liddesdale, came by marriage to the noble and powerful family of Douglas. It is, however, sufficient in this place to refer to the account of the Knights of Liddesdale and of the Lords of Dalkeith, which Sir Walter Scott has given in the Provincial Antiquities; and also to Douglas and Wood's Peerage of Scotland, and the notices contained in the Preface by Mr. Innes to the Morton Papers and Charters, printed at the expense of the Bannatyne Club. But the early history of the Douglases is still capable and worthy of further elucidation.

At an early period there existed in the town of Dalkeith a chapel dedicated to St. Nicholas. Robert the Second, in the second year of his reign (1372), granted a license to James of Douglas to endow a chaplainry in this chapel with the annual sum of £6, 13s. 4d. out of his lands of Horsbruke.[1] Five years later, Sir James of Douglas founded another chaplainry out of his lands of Quilt and Fethane.[2] In August 1380, William Bishop of St. Andrews gave institution to Sir Richard Mellok of Aberbrothok to a vacant chaplainry in the said chapel.[3] There was also within the precincts of the Castle at Dalkeith a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist. Sir James of Douglas, first Lord of Dalkeith, in founding a chaplainry there out of his lands of Louchurde and 40s. annually out of Kirkurde, enjoined that, should the said chapel be under repair, the chaplain should perform his stated service within the chapel of St. Nicholas, or, in the event of war rendering this impracticable in either place, within the parish church of Lesswade.[1] The charter is dated 5th December 1384. Sir James, as he advanced in life, was not unmindful of this chapel. The two interesting documents purporting to be his Latter Will and Testament, dated respectively 30th September 1390 and 19th September 1392, are well known, and, it has been remarked,[2] they "are better calculated to convey a just notion of his rank and importance as a Scottish baron, than any historical document that remains to us." By the first of these deeds he bequeathed his best horse and £10 to the Vicar of Leswade; and besides a cup and a missal, the sum of £20 for the reparation and roofing of the chapel of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith. By the second, after payment of his debts and numerous legacies, the above bequests being repeated, he assigns the residue of his goods to the fabric and ornament of the said chapel, to the support of the poor, and to the payment of chaplains for two years after his decease. He survived however to the year 1420, and was enabled to raise the chapel to the rank of a Collegiate Church, and probably to see the buildings nearly completed, having, with the consent of Henry Wardlaw, Bishop of St. Andrews, provided out of his lands stipends and manses for a provost and five prebendaries as perpetual chaplains, as detailed in his charter, dated 21st June 1406.[3] Sir Walter Scott of Bukcleuch on the 25th January 1449–50, with the consent of his eldest son and heir, David Scott, granted a renunciation of his superiority over the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd in favour of John of Balkasky and his successors chaplains in the prebend of Kirkurd,[4] which had been founded by Sir James of Douglas in the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith.

In the old Papal Taxations the church of Dalkeith is not included, being still part of the Vicarage of Laswade which was rated at £10. Its erection into a separate parish is detailed in an interesting local charter, from which we learn, that in consequence of the inhabitants of Dalkeith having represented the very great inconvenience and danger to which they were exposed during tempestuous weather in having to cross the streams that fell into the Esk, as they resorted to their parish church of Laswade, about two miles distant, and also, that the vicarage teinds were amply sufficient to sustain two vicars, Patrick, Bishop of St. Andrews, had accordingly given his consent to the proposed disjunction. By this arrangement it was declared that, upon the decease or demission of

Mr. James Lewyntoun, at that time vicar, the inhabitants of the town and castle of Dalkeith, and of the park commonly called Graham's Park, and other places in the neighbourhood, should be under the spiritual jurisdiction of a separate vicar, to perform divine service at the altar of the Blessed Virgin in the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith. The original charter of confirmation, dated 1st October 1467, with the seals of the Bishop and chapter of St. Andrews, is preserved in the charter-room of Dalkeith House, and by permission of the Duke of Buccleuch, is now printed in the Appendix to these Notices (p. cxvi.), as it was not recovered in time to be inserted at p. 319 with the other deeds.

In the year 1477, the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith was farther enlarged, when James first Earl of Morton added three canons, endowed with the tithes of the three parishes of Newlands, Kilbucho, and Mordington. As this charter of endowment is contained in the Morton Papers, vol. ii. pp. 226-235, it was not thought necessary to swell the present volume by giving more than the bull of erection of Pope Sixtus iv. Alexander Gifford, parson of Newbattle, having founded two additional chaplainries for the altars of the Crucifix and of St. John the Baptist within the Collegiate

Church of Dalkeith, this endowment was confirmed by a charter under the Great Seal, 31st May 1504. It may be added, that among the Duke of Buccleuch's charters is the deed of resignation and translation by Mr. George Gifford of Scheriffhall, of his right of patronage to the above chaplainry of St. John the Baptist, in favour of James Earl of Morton. It is dated 26th February 1517–18.

No Register connected with the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith has been preserved, and the notices to be gleaned respecting the Provosts and other officials are by no means complete.

Sir James Douglas Provost of Dalkeith is included in the safe conduct granted to James Earl of Douglas, to go to England in May 1453.[1] Jacobus de Douglas, Canonicus de Dalkeith, who was a licentiate at the University of St. Andrews in 1468,[2] must be considered as a different person; and Mr. James Douglas, Provost of Creychton in 1479, has already been mentioned.

Mr. William Gifford also was, in 1468, a licentiate at St. Andrews. As prebendary of Dalkeith he is named in charters in the years 1479 and 1482.[3]

Sir John Crechtoun, vicar of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith, is noticed as taking instruments in the hands of the notary in the deed of resignation 1517–18 above mentioned. There is also preserved an original indenture between James Earl of Mortoun and "ane venerable clerk Schir Johne Creichtoune vicar of Dalkeith," respecting the teind coals of Calder and Dalkeith, dated 25th November 1531.[4]

Mr. Archibald Boyd, who became Provost, was probably a native of Lanarkshire, and was educated at Glasgow. He was incorporated in that University, 7th December 1507;[5] but his intermediate employment, and the date of his obtaining the provostry, have not been ascertained. His connexion with Lanarkshire is suggested by his receiving under the Privy

DALKEITH CHURCH

Eight years later Mr. Archibald Boyd, Provost of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith, obtained a letter under the Privy Seal "of the gift of the non-entres, males, fermes, &c., of the ten-merk land of auld extent of Montgrennan, with the tower, fortalice, manor, &c., lyand within the baillery of Cunynghame and sherifdome of Air, since the deceis of umquhile Sir Johne Ros of Mongrenane knycht," &c., dated 14th December 1547.[2] As Provost, Mr. Archibald Boyd sat in the Provincial Council held at Edinburgh in 1549.[3] The date of his death and the name of his successor are unknown.

At the period of the Reformation Dalkeith was settled as a Presbyterian church. In 1567, Robert Wilsoun was minister with a stipend of £150. He was translated to the adjoining parishes of Newbattle and Melville in 1574,[4] and was succeeded by Mr. Thomas Douglas, minister of Strabrok. Douglas, who had obtained a presentation to the Deanery of Restalrig, under the Earl of Morton's administration, became minister of the united parishes of Dalkeith, Laswade, and Glencorse. On his death in 1575 (as stated at pp. liii. liv.), Mr. George Ramsay became his successor, both as dean of Restalrig and minister of Dalkeith, having the aid of a reader, Andrew Robesoun, who received the third of the provostry of Dalkeith, £8, 17s. 9d., with the whole vicarage of the same, extending to £13, 6s. 8d. During these changes there were still titular prebendaries of the Collegiate church who continued to enjoy some of the fruits of the benefice. "Magister Joannes Dowglas, rector de Kyrkbryde, ac capellanus perpetuus altaris Sancte Crucis fundati infra ecclesiam collegiatam de Dalketh," with the consent of his patron James Earl of Morton, grants a charter of certain church lands, 17th November 1579.[1] William Douglas, one of the prebendaries of the College kirk of Dalkeith, 23d November 1594, granted a discharge for £8, 13s. 4d, as the few-mail of 12 acres of arable land at Gulane in East Lothian, his "patrimony of the altarage callit the Rude Altar foundation within the said College kirk, as prebendary of the same, or as successor to umquhile Mr. Johnne Douglas my father, last prebender of the samyn,"[2] &c.

By some private arrangement Ramsay having resigned his parochial charge of Dalkeith about the year 1582, Mr. Andrew Simsoun became minister;[3] and in 1584, he subscribed the King's "Band."[4] In 1585 and 1586, the following entry occurs in the Assignations of Stipends: Dalkeyth—Mr. Andrew Simsoun, minister his stipend to be paid, the third of the Provestrie of Dalkeith, £8, 17s. 9d; the haill vicarage of Dalkeith, £13, 6s. 8d.,—and smaller sums from other sources. But in "Certain Grieves of the Kirk assembled in Edinburgh, and given to his Majesty," 20th February 1587–8, one was: "The Presbytery of Dalkeith complaineth that manie of their kirks are destitute of pastors and provision, into the which Papists flock and resort; and that sundrie of the Ministrie are bereft of their stipends by annexation, as, namely, Mr. Andrew Simsoun, whose whole stipend is taken away and given to the Abbot of Newbattle."[5] Whether Simsoun resigned in consequence of this alleged procedure is somewhat doubtful: one of his sons became his successor in 1588, and his stipend is entered in precisely similar terms.

Mr. Archibald Symson, who was then admitted minister of Dalkeith, consented, along with Ramsay, to the disjunction of the deanery of Restalrig, and the appropriation of the fruits to the parsonage of Laswade and the parsonage of Dalkeith, according to the following Act of Parliament, 5th June 1592:—

Among the Morton Papers there is a letter, dated 8th October 1592, addressed to the Earl of Morton as patron of the Provostry of Dalkeith, by Mr. William Scott,[2] in favour of his brother-in-law, Thomas Hamilton, then younger of Priestfield. It states that Hamilton, who had been appointed a Lord of Session, was desirous to acquire a "kirk-title" or designation, and the provostry being a benefice of small value, not exceeding 40 merks yearly, he solicited his Lordship to sign the presentation, with the promise, "that in all your reasonabill adois and causis he (the new Judge) salbe your Lordship's gude freind."[3] The arrangement of this matter had probably not been completed, as Hamilton, on the 9th November, took his seat on the bench by the title of Drumcairne. He was created Lord Binning in 1613, and Earl of Melrose in 1619, afterwards exchanging the latter title for that of Earl of Haddington.[4]

In terms of the above Act of Parliament, George Ramsay and Archibald Symson continued respectively parochial ministers of Laswade and Dalkeith. Ramsay's stipend, according to the Books of Assignations, was "the third of the vicarage of Leswaid, with the haill personage and vicarage of Leswaid and Glencorse." He still retained his title of Dean of Restalrig in 1600, as noticed in the Appendix.[1] From his confirmed testament[2] we learn, that "Mr. George Ramsay, sometime minister of Lessuaid," died on the 8th December 1629, leaving a widow, Margaret Murray: their marriage-contract was dated at Dalkeith, 1st September 1608.

In like manner, Symson's stipend in 1596, was "the haill personage of Dalkeith, £93, 0s. 8d., the haill vicarage of Dalkeith, £13, 1s. 8d., and the third of the provostry, £8, 17s. 9¾d." He was the son of Mr. Andrew Symson, one of the early Reformers, and a distinguished scholar, who was successively, master of the grammar school at Perth, and at Dunbar, where he was also minister till 1582. Patrick Symson, minister of Stirling, was another son, of whom five entered the ministry, and all of them being zealous asserters of Presbyterian parity, they rendered themselves obnoxious by their resistance to King James's scheme for introducing Episcopacy into Scotland. Archibald Symson, minister of Dalkeith, author of various works, died there in December 1632.—The succession of the ministers of Dalkeith, continued to the year 1843, is very accurately given in the New Statistical Account of the Parish.[3]

After the preceding notices, it would be unnecessary to say much respecting the old church of St. Nicholas.[4] We cannot greatly err in stating, that it must have been erected during the life of Sir James Douglas, first Lord of Dalkeith, in the early part of the fifteenth century. In the year 1686, the minister having reported the church to be in a ruinous state, the Presbytery ordered it "to be made wind and water tight." Again, in

[4] Two old deeds from Principal Lee's collection furnish the names of Ninian Dowglas, in 1551, and of Mr. John Dowglas, in 1586, as chaplains of "the Rude Alter. situat within the College Kirk of Dalkeyth."

1762, the building of a new steeple and spire for the church was authorized, and the church itself, in 1767, was directed to be repaired. In its old state it was by no means a comfortable place of worship, and required further repairs. A picturesque view of the church, from a drawing by Mr. E. Blore, illustrates the account of Dalkeith, in the Provincial Antiquities, published in 1826. Sir Walter Scott there says, "The church of Dalkeith is a Gothic building of very ordinary workmanship, of which the eastern end is unroofed and ruinous, the walls serving, however, to enclose a burial ground, containing the remarkable monuments of the Grahames, which have been already noticed, from which opens the funeral vault of the family of Buccleuch." This vault is the north aisle or chapel attached to the church, as represented in the wood-cut vignette on the next page, from a drawing by Mr. William P. Burton.

The accompanying ground-plan is reduced from drawings made by David Bryce, Esq., R.S.A., Architect, in 1854, when the church was at length resolved to be restored. This was accomplished, chiefly at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, under Mr. Bryce's directions, the walls having been 'cased,' the interior arrangements altered and rendered more commodious, and a new steeple and spire erected in place of the comparatively modern square tower and steeple. In this restoration the eastern portion or chancel, which, as not required for public service, had been separated from the church by a partition wall, for at least two centuries, was fortunately allowed to remain untouched in its old ruinous state. The entrance or door-way to the south, with the walls and buttresses, being still very entire, it is most desirable that this portion of the building should not be allowed by neglect to go to destruction, which might be avoided were a light roof thrown over it, the windows opened up and glazed, the weeds and rank grass cleared out, and care especially taken to preserve the old Douglas monument with its recumbent figures, which at present is exposed to irreparable injury. By some unaccountable mistake Sir Walter Scott has described this monument as two curious but wasted tombstones, representing knights in chain armour, like those ancient and curious figures on the tombs in the Temple Church, London. Mr. James Drummond, R.S.A., in a recent communication to the Society of Antiquaries,[1] has established, almost beyond doubt, from the armorial bearings, that instead of representing one of "the gallant Grahames," as currently stated, we have the figures of James, first Earl of Morton, who died about 1498, and his lady the Princess Johanna, third daughter of King James the First of Scotland. A reduced copy of Mr. Drummond's very careful drawing of the monument is given on the opposite plate.

ANCIENT MONUMENT IN THE CHURCH OF TYNINGHAME

ROSSLYN.

The Collegiate church of Rosslyn is situated on an elevated ground called the College Hill, overlooking the North Esk, about seven miles to the south of Edinburgh. It is a very common but popular error, even with writers like Sir Walter Scott, to speak of this charmingly decorated example of ecclesiastical architecture as merely a chapel. It is occasionally so called in old deeds, but we have no indication of any separate chapel of the name, and from the first it was designed as a Collegiate church, dedicated to Matthew the Apostle and Evangelist. The establishment consisted of a provost, six prebendaries, and two singing boys or choristers. According to the varied accounts, it was founded in the year 1446 by William St. Clair, Earl of Orkney and Lord of Rosslyn. It is singular that the foundation-charter should not have been recorded, nor has any copy of it, after a long search, been discovered. There can, however, be no doubt regarding either the name of its founder or the time of its erection. It is sufficient to state, that the continuator of the Scotichronicon, circa 1447, in his list of Præfecturæ sive Præposituræ, says, "Dominus Willelmus de Sancto Claro Comes Orcadiæ est in fabricando sumptuosam structuram apud Roslyn." We might conclude from this notice that considerable progress had already been made in the building.

This powerful nobleman succeeded his father Henry, second Earl of Orkney, in the year 1420. His first wife was Dame Elizabeth Douglas, formerly Countess of Buchan, and this lady is usually said to have erected the sub-chapel, which was entered by a flight of steps near the High Altar, or from the south end of the east aisle. The Earl was Lord Chancellor of Scotland from 1454 to 1458. He had a grant of the Earldom of Caithness, 28th August 1455. When King James the Third, in 1469, received the Islands of Orkney and Zetland as the dowry of his Queen, Margaret of Denmark, the Earl in the following year made a surrender of the Earldom of Orkney, which was then annexed to the Crown, and received in exchange certain lands in Fife. He then continued to be styled Earl of Caithness and Lord Saint Clair. For his second wife the Earl of Orkney married Marjory, daughter of Alexander Sutherland of Dunbeath, who in his testament, dated at Rosslyn the 5th of November 1456, desired his "body to be gravyt (buried) in the College Kyrk of ane hie and mychti lord Wilyam Earl of Caithness and Orknay, &c., in Rosslyng, ner quhar hymself thinkis to ly." Among his various bequests there were allowances for a priest to perform daily service, and for "the byggyn and reparatioun of the said College Kyrk:" also, "Item, I geve and lef ane of the chalys that Theman has to the College Kyrk of Rosslyng." Three Earls of Orkney and nine Barons of Rosslyn, it is said, were here interred. Some of the traditions connected with

> "that Chapel proud,
> Where Rosslyn's chiefs uncoffined lie;
> Each Baron, for a sable shroud,
> Sheath'd in his iron panoply," may be regarded as poetical fictions. Father Augustine Hay's descriptions of Earl William's sumptuous style of living may truly be called the dreams of a fond imagination, as where he says, the Earl's lady was served by seventy-five gentlewomen, whereof fifty-three were daughters to noblemen, all clothed in velvet and silk, with their chains of gold and other ornaments; or when coming to Edinburgh, she was attended by two hundred gentlemen on horseback, and entering into her lodgings at the foot of the Black Friars Wynd, she was preceded by eighty lighted torches; and also, how the Earl himself was royally served at his own table in vessels of gold and silver, Lord Dirleton being his master of the household, Lord Borthwick his cup-bearer, and Lord Fleming his carver, their deputies, in absence, being the Lairds of Drumlanrig, Drummelzier, and Calder. Considering the enormous expense of such dresses, and the usual mode of living at that time, either at court, or among the Scottish and English nobility, Arnot, the historian of Edinburgh, remarks, that he had no hesitation in rejecting Father Hay's account "as a most extravagant romance." It is indeed a flight worthy of Sir Thomas Urquhart of Cromarty.

In the destination of his estates, William Earl of Caithness, and his spouse, Margaret Sutherland Countess of Caithness, granted charters to their son, Sir Oliver Sinclair, knight, of the baronies of Rosslyn, Herbertschyre, and Pentland, on the 9th September 1476, including the advocation and presentation of the College of Rosslyn and the Chapel of St. Matthew, and of the president and prebendaries of the same: "De omnibus et singulis terris et barroniis de Rossline, etc. . . . una cum villa de Rosslyne in burgo in barronia cum donatione Ecclesiæ Collegiatæ de Rosslyne ac præsidis et prebendorum dicti Collegii et Capellæ Sancti Mathei in Rosslyne, etc. super resignatione dicti Willielmi Comitis Cathaniæ, tenendis de Rege." These charters were confirmed under the Great Seal, on the 1st November 1486.[1] Similar charters in favour of George Sinclair of Rosslyn are recorded, 5th January 1491-2.[2]

On the death of William Earl of Caithness, between 1482 and 1484, or nearly forty years after its foundation, the edifice remained unfinished. His younger son and successor in the barony of Rosslyn carried on the work to some extent. "Sir Oliver Sinclair of Rosslyn," says Father Augustine Hay, "finished the Chapell, as appears by his scutcheon in the vault, whereon there appears only a ragged cross, as also on the left hand of the window of the sacristie under ground; whereas above the high altar there is a scutcheon quartered Cathness and Roslin, and betwixt the second and third window, from the east to the west, there is a scutcheon quartered Cathness, Norway, or some other family," &c.[1] But the entire building, like so many others of the same age, was never completed, as the nave was never begun, and of the transepts the east walls only were erected. Besides the high altar, there were three others dedicated respectively to St. Matthew, St. Peter, and St. Andrew, and another in the sub-chapel to the Virgin Mary. The endowment originally consisted of the church lands of Pentland, four acres of meadow, with the kips [or jutting-points of land], and eight sowms [horse-loads] of grass. In February 1523-4 Sir William Sinclair of Rosslyn granted other portions of land in the neighbourhood, for erecting dwelling-houses with gardens to the provost and prebendaries. This charter, with its confirmation by King James the Fifth, is printed at page 327.

The "Genealogie of the Sainteclaires of Rosslyn, including the Chartulary of Rosslyn," forms part of the collections of Father Richard Augustine Hay so often quoted, compiled about the year 1700. The author being related to the family had access to their papers, and transcribed many of the old charters; but after giving that of 1523-4, which is also included in the Great Seal Register, and two deeds of 1571 and 1572,[2] he says, "I think that the other charters relating to Pentland, and the Chapel of Roslyn, may be found in Comiston's hands, or in Sir Alexander Gibson of Pentland's charter-chest, or els amongst my Lord Sinclar's papers."[3] A considerable portion of the charters thus transcribed by Father Hay are in the possession of Professor W. E. Aytoun, who most kindly and liberally gave the use of them, but, for the reason just stated, they unfortunately were less serviceable for the present work than I could have desired; and inquiries in other quarters for any ecclesiastical deeds have proved unsuccessful.

The loss of these earlier deeds connected with this Collegiate church has, no doubt, deprived us of much interesting information; and I have been unable to find the name of any of the Provosts before the reign of King James the Fifth.

Sir John Dickson is styled Provost of Rosslyn in the charter of confirmation granted to Sir William Saintclair of Rosslyn, 9th February 1523-4.[1] On the death of Mr. Alexander Synclar, last Rector of the parish church of Pentland, Dominus Johannes Dyksone, presbyter, was presented by Sir William Synclare de Roslyne, knight, 18th May 1521.[2] His name occurs in the list of Determinants at St. Andrews in the year 1512; but his history is otherwise unknown; and of his successor, the only incident recorded has placed him in the rank of the early Scottish reformers. This Provost was

Sir David Huchesone, who received his education at Glasgow, having been incorporated in that University in October 1520.[3] According to the annexed extract from the Privy Seal Register in August 1540, when a gift of his escheated goods was granted to Oliver Sinclair the favourite of King James the Fifth, we learn that Hutcheson had been condemned for heresy by the Spiritual Judge; but whether it was in absence is not stated, and it is equally uncertain whether, in these troublous times, he had found his way to the Continent as a place of shelter for persons accused as heretics.

Sir John Sinclair, who succeeded Huchesone in the provostry, was probably related to the family of Rosslyn. A letter under the Privy Seal contains the presentation of Sir John Sinclare to the vicarage of Alwes in the diocese of Murray, 16th September 1538.[5] In a Decreet-Arbitral we find the name of "James Sinkler, son to umquhile Sir Olipher Sinkler of Rosling knycht, Maister John Sinkler, sheref-deput of Edinburgh, in company with Sir Johne Sinkler, provest of Rosling, 13th February 1541-2."[1] John Sinclare, provost of Rosling, was presented to the vicarage of Dummany, in the diocese of St. Andrews, 2d January 1547-8.[2] His name also occurs as Provost in 1551 and 1553.[3] Sir John Sinclare, provost of Rosling, was presented to the chaplainry called Ross, within the deanery of Gowrie, and diocese of St. Andrews, 7th July 1555.[4] This notice enables us to fix the period of his decease, as on the 20th September 1556 a new presentation was issued, "super capellania Roiss nuncupata, infra diaconatum de Gourie, et diocesim Sanctiandree, nunc vacante per decessum quondam Joannis Sinclare ultimi capellani et possessoris ejusdem."[5] The name of the next Provost is somewhat uncertain, but we find that

Sir John Dickson, Provost of Rosslyn, granted a charter of the kirklands to Edward Sinclair, son and apparent heir of Sir William Sinclair Baron of Rosslyn, Pentland, and Herbertshire, dated 28th April 1571. He can scarcely be identified with the person who was Provost in 1523-4. On the other hand

Sir John Robesoun, Provost, within ten months of the date of the preceding deed, with the consent of the Collegiate church, assembled in chapter, on the 26th February 1571-2, made a similar or still fuller grant of the kirk-lands in favour of the said Edward Sinclair younger of Rosslyn. Both deeds are printed in the "Genealogie of the Saintclaires of Rosslyn."[6] The latter is signed

Father Hay adds, "the subscrivers can scarcely writt." It is more remarkable from the circumstance, that Robesoun alludes to his having held the Provostship for several years, and that, owing partly to the distracted state of the country, its revenues had been withheld. There may have perhaps been some contending claims between Dickson and Robesoun. In the latter deed, it is stated that the Provost and prebendaries, considering the obligations they were under to Sir William Sinclair, had conveyed to his son and heir Edward Sinclair, the kirk-lands of Pentland, &c., for the annual sum of five pounds usual money of Scotland, and also engaged to furnish eighty sheaves of straw from the tithes of the parish church of Pentland, to support the cattle employed in tilling the said lands.—"Sir Johne Robesoun, Provest of Rosling, persone and vicar of Paintland, dwelland in the town of Dalkeith," died 25th April 1583.[1]

After the Reformation, no provision had been made for supplying Rosslyn with either a minister or a reader. It was considered to form part of Pentland, and the parish of Lasswade at that period consisted of three parishes united, Lasswade, Melville, and Pentland with the Provostry of Rosslyn. Nor was it indeed until the year 1835, that Rosslyn was erected into a quoad sacra parish, and disjoined from Lasswade. But without entering upon its ecclesiastical state, it may be noticed, that the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, 5th May 1590, directed Oliver Sinclair of Rosslyn "to be called before the Presbyterie of Dalkeith, for not permitting George Lundie (who had recently been appointed minister), to resort for the discharge of his office to the kirk of Pentland." At a subsequent meeting of the Synod, reference is made to former ordinances, which enjoined the said Presbyterie "to tak ordour with the Lard of Rosling for keiping images and uther monumentis of idolatrie in his kirk," and also "to tak ordour with him for demolishing of the said monumentis." Again, on the 3d April 1593, the Laird of Rosling declared to the Synod,[2] "he was nane of the parochinaris of Leswaid, but ane of the parochinaris of St. Katherinis in the Hopis, in respect his residence was in the Logan-house tower." According to Father Hay both the Chapel and Castle of Rosslyn were pillaged and defaced, by an unruly mob, on the night of the 11th December 1688.

The Church of Rosslyn and the surrounding scenery on the sequestered banks of the Esk, with the caves of Gorton and Hawthornden, are so universally known and admired as to render any description unnecessary. The church itself is undergoing a somewhat unnecessary process of restoration, at the expense of the Earl of Rosslyn. Among the hundred works containing views of the Castle or the Church of Rosslyn, the following may be specified: Slezer's Theatrum Scotiæ, 1693; Father Hay's Genealogie of the St. Clairs, 1700; the Marchioness of Stafford's (afterwards Duchess of Sutherland) Views in Orkney, &c., 1807; Britton's Architectural Antiquities, vol. iii. 1812; Scott's Provincial Antiquities, 1826; and Billings's Baronial and Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Scotland.

PAGE XXVI.—PROVOSTS OF TRINITY COLLEGE, 1532-1540.—In consequence of having mislaid some of my notes, when preparing this account of the Provosts, the paragraph at the foot of the page, commencing with the words "Some uncertainty exists," &c., should be deleted, and the three following paragraphs substituted :—

Mr. WILLIAM CUNNINGHAM, the youngest son of William, fourth Earl of Glencairne,[1] was educated for the Church, and upon the death of Sir John Dingwell, was preferred to the vacant Provostry of Trinity College, towards the close of 1532. He held the office for nearly seven years. In a deed of William Earl of Glencairne, dated May 1538, his name occurs as a witness, "William Cunninghame, Provost of the Trinite College, besyd Edinburgh;" and again in another deed, "Pro Jacobo Naper et Mariota Quhite sua sponsa," in February 1538-9, he is styled, "Venerabilis vir Willelmus Cunninghame prepositus Ecclesie Collegiate Sancte Trinitatis prope Edinburgh."[2] As there is reason to believe that Cunninghame was promoted to the See of Argyle early in 1539, this will account for his resignation of the Deanery at that time, when Thomas Erskine became his successor; (See next page)—Keith's account of the Bishops of Argyle is very confused and inaccurate. It may therefore be stated that Robert Montgomery, youngest son of Hugh, third Lord of Montgomery and Earl of Eglinton, was postulated to that See in 1525. At St. Andrews that year his name occurs among the students in Pedagogio, as "Magister Robertus Montgomery postulatus de Argyll." He appears as Bishop of Argyll (Episcopus Lismorensis) in a decreet-arbitral, 2d May 1530.[3] Instead of surviving till 1557 or 1558, according to Keith, he was dead perhaps in 1539, but certainly in 1544, when three natural sons were legitimized, "filiis naturalibus quondam reverendi in Christo patris Roberti Ergadie Episcopi."[4] King James the Fifth, by the following letter under the Privy Seal, conferred on the Bishop of Argyle a very extensive right of presentation to vacant benefices in his diocese:—"ANE letter to WILLIAM BISCHOP OF ERGYLE, gevand and committand to him power to mak, direct, and gif vnder his awne sele and subscriptioun manuale letters of presentatioun of all benefices pertenying to our Souerane Lordis presentatioun within the diocy of Ergile,

At Edinburgh, the xv day of Februare, the zeir forsaid [1539-40.]"[1] At the Provincial Assembly held at Edinburgh in 1549, among the Bishops present was "Willelmus electus Lismorensis confirmatus." This might seem as if Cunningham had only recently, owing either to want of interest or some contending claim, obtained his confirmation to the See. While Cunningham was Bishop of Argyll, he obtained, under the Privy Seal, "a letter maid to William Bishop of Ergile, his airis and assignais, off the gift of non-entres, males, fermes, proffittis, and dewiteis of all and sindrie, the landis and baronyes of Kilmawris, Stewinstoun, Ramferly, Fyndlaystoun, &c., in our Soveranis handis, or his graces predecessouris or Superiouris be resson of non-entres sen the deccis of umquhill Robert Erle of Glencairne, Cuthbert, or William Erlis of Glencarne, or ony of thame, 24th April 1550."[2] William was bishop in January 1554-5; but whether in consequence of death or resignation, James Hamilton, a natural brother of James Duke of Chattelherault, had become Bishop of Argyle in 1558. It is probable that this was effected by an arrangement, which secured "to Mr. William Cunningham"[3] the pension of the Subdeanry of Glasgow. Mr. James Hammilton, Bishop of Argyle and Sub-Dean of Glasgow, died 6th January 1579-80.

Thomas Erskine, eldest son of Sir Thomas Erskine, Secretary, obtained a presentation to the vacant Provostry of Trinity College, 17th February 1538-9, according to the following notice in the Privy Seal Register:—"Presentatio Thome Erskin super prepositura Ecclesie Collegiate Sancte Trinitatis prope burgum de Edinburgh nunc vacante aut quo tempore eadem vacare contigerit per resignationem cessionem aut dimissionem Magistri Willelmi Cunynghame nunc prepositi et possessoris eiusdem, ad presentationem Domini Regis et collationem Archiepiscopi Sancti Andree spectantem, etc. Apud Linlithgow xvij Februarii Anno Domini I^m v^c xxxviij. Per Signaturam."[4] In the following year however he had resigned the office, apparently on being promoted to a wealthier benefice, as Commendator of the Abbey of Dryburgh. (Lib. S. Marie de Dryburgh, p. xxiii.) The deed of collation of his successor as Provost, expressly bears that the office had become vacant by the pure and simple demission "per Thomam Erskyne clericum, ultimum prepositum."

Mr. Robert Erskine, Rector of Glenbervy, was the next Provost of Trinity College. He was a younger son of John Erskine of Dun. He was educated for the Church at the University of St. Andrews, where he was a Determinant in 1524, and a Licentiate in 1526. The original papers from the Dun charter-chest, published by John Stuart, Esq., in the Spalding Miscellany, vol. iv., throw much light on the history of that family. From a precept by John Erskine of Dun for a seisin granted in favour of the Provost and Canons of St. Salvator's College, St. Andrews, dated the 14th of July 1526, Mr. Robert Erskine appears as Rector of Glenbervy.[1] The deed of collation by the Abbots of Cambuskenneth and Kinloss of Mr. Robert Erskyn, Rector of Glenbervy, to the Provostry of the Collegiate Church of the Holy Trinity, near Edinburgh, bears the date 13th September 1539, and also the deed of institution by Mr. John Logan, Dean of the said church.[2] Logan continued to hold the office of Dean till after the Reformation; but Erskine, probably in consequence of his further promotion, within a few months had resigned his Provostry, as stated at p. xxvii. Mr. Robert Erskyn appears subsequently as Rector of Glenbervy and Dean of Aberdeen;[3] and the Dean, apparently as uncle of the Laird of Dun, signs a contract, 23d April 1552.[4] In the same year he obtains collation of the canonry and rectory of Arbuthnot, called a Prebend of the Collegiate Church or Chapel Royal of the Kirkheugh (canonicatus et rectoria de Arbuthnot nuncupata prebenda Ecclesie collegiate sive capelle Regie beate Marie de Rupe prope et extra civitatem Sancti Andree).[5] As Dean of Aberdeen his name occurs on the 5th January 1558-9.[6] Mr. Robert Erskine, Dean of Aberdeen and Rector of Arbuthnot was alive in 1561.[7]

KIRK OF FIELD.

Page xxxvi, line 1, add,—An annual pension of £100, in the minority of King James the Fifth, was granted to Mag. Richard Bothwell in utroque jure Doctor, for his good and gratuitous services to us and our said tutor, John Duke of Albany, 20th November 1520.

Page xxxvii.—Alexander Forrest was educated at St. Andrews, where he took his Master's degree in 1534. As the names Forrest, Forres, and Forret were sometimes used indiscriminately, we may identify him with Mr. Alexander Forret, Provost of Foulis, who sat in the Provincial Council at Edinburgh in 1549. In deeds connected with the New Foundation of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, the name occurs of Mag. Alexander Forres, prepositus de Foulis, 26th June 1550, and of Mag. Alexander Forrest, prepositus Ecclesie beate Marie de Campis oppidi Edinburgensis, 25th February 1553-4. In a contemporary MS. we find under the apparent date 20th March 1555, at Rome. 'Item, apointed with M. Johnne Row for the Provostrie of the Kirk [of] Field, and caus M. Alexander Forres send his mandat to ratify the xx lib. pensioun reservit to the said Mr. Johnne."—(Makkison's MS. p. 250, quoted in M'Crie's Life of Knox, vol. ii. p. 291.) I presume the meaning is, that Row had been appointed to negotiate at the Court of Rome for Forrest, not that he himself had ever been Provost.

Page xxxvii.—The name of Adam Pennycuik occurs in the Registers as a student in the University of St. Andrews in 1543, and he probably was the future Provost of the Kirk of Field.

The names of some of the Chaplains or Prebendaries in the Kirk of Field, which occur in various deeds, may be briefly noticed. The deeds referred to are chiefly preserved in old Edinburgh and Canongate Protocol books, but they were not of sufficient importance to be included in the present volume.

Dom. Willelmus Richartson, chaplain, 10th September 1528.

Dom. Adam Scheile, chaplain of the altar of St. Mary Magdalene, 6th December 1509.

Magister David Vocat (see p. xxxiv.) completed his education at the University of Paris in 1494. His name occurs frequently in the Edinburgh Protocol books, in the early part of the sixteenth century. As Chaplain of the chaplainry in the Kirk of Field, founded by Thomas Russell, he, with consent of the Provost, bailies, &c., of Edinburgh, patrons of the same, resigned the house, grammar school, and garden in the vennel of the Kirk of Field, 30th August 1509. Vocat assigned an annual-rent and houses, to found an anniversary service for his soul, 20th June 1521. A seisin was granted "cum consensu et assensu Magistri Davidis Vocat presidentis Prepositi dicte ecclesie beatissime virginis Marie de Campis," 11th December 1527.

RESTALRIG.

Page li.—Mr. William Gibsone appears in early life to have held other preferments besides those mentioned in the text. From the Privy Seal Register (vol. v. fol. 117) we find that, on the 25th September 1517, Mr. James Forester obtained a presentation to the rectory or prebend of Olrek in the diocese of Caithness, when it should be vacant by the resignation of Mr. William Gibsone, in exchange for the vicarage of Logymurdoch in the diocese of St. Andrews, belonging to the said Master James.

Page lii.—Mr. John Sinclair.—From the following extract from the Privy Seal Register (vol. xxi. fol. 4.) it will be seen that he received the Queen's permission to resign the Deanery of Restalrig in favour of his nephew, James Lauder, as early as 1547.

Regina.—We, with auiss, consent, and autoritie of our derrest cousing and tutour, James Erle of Arrane Lord Hammiltoun, protectour and gouernour of oure realme, ffor the gude, trew, and thankfull sernice done to vs oure said tutour and gouernour be oure weilbelouit clerk and counsalour maister Johne Sinclare, Dene of the College Kirk of Restalrig, and for diuerse vtheris ressonable caussis and considerationis mouing ws oure said tutour and gouernour be the tennour heirof, gevis and grantis oure speciale licence to the said maister Johnne to resignne the said Denerie of Restalrig in our maist Halie fader the Papis handis, or ony utheris hauand sufficient power to ressaue the samin, in fanouris of oure weilbelouit James Lauder, sister sone to the said maister Johnne, with regres, ingres, and access, and reseruatioun of all fructis, honnouris, and digniteis in specialibus et temporalibus of the said Denerie to the said maister Johnne ffor all the dayis of his life, as he plesis to extend his supplicatioun, and our Halie fader the Paip will grant, &c. At Edinburgh, the fyft day of Aprile, the yeir of God 1547.

In the same Register (fol. 6) there is a long letter, in Latin, of the same date, addressed to the Pope, soliciting his Holiness to grant his authority for completing the proposed arrangements. It is uncertain whether the application was successful; we know at least that Sinclair not only retained the title and continued to act as Dean, but also received the fruits of the benefice till the year of his death in 1566. His promotion to the See of Ross a few months previously may perhaps have led to his resignation, but it was no doubt in consequence of the above-mentioned negotiation that Mr. James Lauder at length became his uncle's successor as Dean of Restalrig. See p. liii.

The names of some of the Prebendaries may be subjoined from the Privy Seal and other Registers, exclusive of those already noticed in the extracts given on pages lvi-lviii.

Dom. Hugo Wilsoun, prebendary, deceased before 4th May 1552.

Among the Rosslyn deeds in the possession of Professor Aytoun, there are two duplicate tacks or leases by the Dean and Chapter of Restalrig, (see p. xc.) with the consent of the King as Lord Patron of certain church lands, in favour of Matthew Finlasone, and his son, Mr. Johne Finlasone. Each has the signatures, "James R.; Mr. George Ramsay, dene of Restalrigge; John Barbour, prebendar of thrie prebendaries of Restalrig; Patrick Dunbar ane of the prebendaries of Restalrig, called Bute quintus;" dated at Edinburgh, 15th August 1600, with the Chapter Seal, represented by the wood-cut at p. lviii.

"When the Chancellor Morton," says Chalmers, "obtained from Queen Mary, in 1564, a confirmation of his estates, it included the advowson of the College and prebendaries of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith, with its pertinents. The specification of such matters to such a man shows clearly that there was then no parish of Dalkeith."—Caledonia, vol. iii. p. 799. The terms of the above deed clearly proves the reverse. The Act referred to, dated 17th October 1564, is contained in the Acts of Parliament, vol. ii. p. 562.

In the year 1642, the estates of Dalkeith, with the patronage of the Church, were purchased of the Earl of Morton by Francis Earl of Buccleuch.

BORTHWICK.

In former times the name of Borthwick was Locherwart, or Lochquhorwart, pronounced Loch Wharret, when annexed by the Chancellor Lord Creychton to his newly erected Collegiate Church (see p. lxxiii.) After the Reformation, in 1574, &c., Borthwick was united to and under the jurisdiction of the minister of Heriot and Stow, with a reader, James Gibson, who had the manse and glebe, and a stipend of £20. By a charter, 4th April 1596, King James the Sixth disjoined from the Collegiate Kirk of Creichton the prebends of Arnetstone (now Arniston), Myddelton, and Vogrie, and two clerks; and these, with the whole vicarage of Borthwick, were erected into a separate benefice, as the Parish Kirk of Borthwick. This arrangement was ratified by Parliament, 11th July 1606.[1] But a few years later, 23d October 1612, Sir James Dundas of Arniston, Knight, having represented to Parliament that the Kirk of Borthwick was ruinous, for the purpose of "uphalding it," it was enacted, that the part of it called the Revestrie, should be assigned to him for a family burial-place in all time coming, in consideration of his furnishing the expenses required for repairing the Church.[2] The Church itself was destroyed by an accidental fire in May 1775, but the walls were allowed to remain, instead of the customary practice of using the old stones for constructing some barn-like meeting-house, which almost inevitably replaced the old ornamented Gothic church that harmonized so well with the surrounding scenery. This old ruin is chiefly remarkable for the aisle which preserves the sculptured figures of its founder, as is supposed, William de Borthwick, and of his lady, a Douglas. There is an engraving of this monument, from a drawing by E. Blore, in the Provincial Antiquities.

Mr. Adam Colt, minister, was presented "to the benefice and parsonage of the parish kirk of Borthwick, newly erected." 12th May 1596.

MELVILLE.

The name of "Thomas de Kirkmichel, rector parochialis ecclesie de Malvil Sancti Andree diocesis, bacallarius in decretis," appears in a Papal letter in his favour to secure for him the vacant benefice of the parish church of Kellis in Galloway, 4th Kal. Nov. 1463. Mr. Archibald Hay, Rector of the Parish Church of Mailuille, was inducted in November 1536. He was Rector here, 11th June 1546. (Register of Dunfermline, pp. 386, 394.)

LASSWADE.

The Church of Lasswade in the old Taxatio was rated at ninety marks. It became a mensal church of the Bishopric of St. Andrews, in the twelfth century, forming a prebend of St. Salvator's church, but was annexed to the Collegiate church of Restalrig in the reign of King James the Third. Mr. Walter Lyndsay, appears in register of the [1] Acts of Parl. Scotl. vol. iv. p. 327. [2] Ib. vol. iv. p. 499.

Faculty of Arts, St. Salvator's College, St. Andrews, 8th October 1457, and is styled Rector of Lasswade, 28th January 1460-61. Dom. Johannes Crawfurd was Vicar of Lasswade, 7th March 1501-2. Mag. Willelmus Nudry was Vicar of Lesswade, 16th November 1529.

After the Reformation in the parochial divisions and arrangements, various changes were made in the appointment of ministers and readers in this district, some of which have already been specified. From its connexion with Restalrig and Dalkeith, it may be added, that the old church of Lasswade having become unfit for public worship, the present large and commodious edifice was erected in the year 1793. The minister of the parish, in the Statistical Account, says, with some complacency, "The church now erecting, in point of accommodation and magnificence of structure, will far exceed any modern country church in Scotland;" and his successor, in the New Statistical Account, conjoins the new church, the manse, and the ruins of the old church, as "the three objects forming a group remarkable for its beauty." Passing over "the magnificence of structure" of the church, we are more concerned with the ruins of the old building (apparently a structure of the end of the fourteenth century), portions of which were fortunately allowed to remain, and are partly used for private burial vaults. A picturesque view of the church from the south bank of the Esk, from a sketch by Mr. Clerk of Eldin, in 1776, before it was concealed by houses on the opposite bank, will be found among "The Eldin Etchings," Plate xlvii. The accompanying wood-cut is reduced from a charming drawing made a few years ago by Mr. James Drummond, R.S.A.
